property including the zirait lands in dispute. The judgment of this Court, from which it is now sought to appeal, deprives them equally with the plaintiffs of the benefit of the decree of the Trial Court to the extent of their shares in the 51 bighas now allotted to the widows; and, although they are not appellants to the Privy Council, they are made respondents in the present proceedings and would, I apprehend, be entitled to appear in the present appeal and support the case presented by the appellants. Moreover, the procedure provided by Order XLI, rule 33, is particularly appropriate to suits of this nature, and there is no reason to suppose that their Lordships would not adopt that procedure in the present case. Should the appeal succeed, the first party, defendants, would be entitled to their share in the disputed property equally with the appellants. It would appear, therefore, that the principle acted on in Lal Bhugwat Sahay v. Rai Pashupati Nath (1) (ubi sup) governs the present case if the value of the 51 bighas of land in dispute exceeds Rs. 10,000.

The respondents, however, rely upon the case of De Silva v. De Silva (2) which decided that the value of the subject matter in dispute on appeal under section 110 must be determined by reference to the detriment to the party seeking relief, and where the value of the relief sought is estimated at less than Rs. 10,000 the subject-matter in dispute is not of the prescribed value. It was accordingly decided in that case that, where the plaintiff claimed and was awarded a third share in certain house property as one of the heirs of his mother to whom the property formerly belonged but which had been assigned by her husband to third parties after her death, no appeal lay to His Majesty in Council as the value of the share claimed was less than Rs. 10,000, although the value of the whole property exceeded that amount. The only claimant in that case was the plaintiff but the present appeal appears to me to involve, if not directly certainly indirectly, the claims of the first party, defendants, as well as of the appellants, the effect of the decree appealed from being to prejudice the interests of all those parties who between them are entitled to the whole 51 bighas if the decree of the High Court should be set aside. The decision of the Madras High Court in Velu Goundan v. Kumaravelu Goundan (3) is not in conflict with the view expressed, as in that case the suit was not one for a general partition among all the share-holders but for a specific and definite share by one member of the family only.

In my opinion, there is no inconsistency between the views expressed in the cases referred to and the same principle finds expression in each. It is necessary in all such cases to ascertain what the subject-matter in dispute is, and this can only be done by considering the detriment to the parties affected by the decree. In the present case the decree affects the interests not only of the plaintiffs who are appealing but of some of the defendants other than the widows who, although respondents, are asserting a claim to a share in the disputed property and whose interests will be finally determined by the appeal.

As there is a dispute between the parties as to the actual value of the 51 bighas the matter will be referred to the Court of first instance under Order XLV, rule 5, of the Civil Procedure Code to report as to the market-value of the same and to return the report together with the evidence to this Court at an early date.

ADAMI, J.—I agree.

On 9th June 1912 certain property was attached in execution of a decree by K. On 12th February 1913, BOHRA BHUPAL V. KUNDAN LAL.

L., another decree-holder, applied for execution by rateable distribution. On the 25th March 1913, the property was sold. On 2nd April 1913 K. and the judgment-debtor applied to have the sale set aside on the ground that K's decree had been satisfied out of Court, but the application was disallowed. The auction-purchaser having failed to complete the deposit of the purchase-money, the sale was set aside on the 24th May 1913. On the 26th May 1913 the judgment-debtors mortgaged the property to B. On 26th June 1913 L. attached the property and it was sold to P. who, on 12th February 1914, sold it to the present defendant. B. brought the present suit to enforce his mortgage against P. who asserted that, as against him the mortgage was void :

Held, that as P.'s right was a right enforceable under L.'s attachment of the 20th June 1913, and as this attachment was subsequent to the mortgage to B. the mortgage was enforceable against him. [p. 848, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Agra, dated the 23rd of January 1918.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. P. Ghosh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for sale based upon two mortgage-deeds of the 26th of May 1913 and the 6th of December 1913 executed by the defendants, Gauri Shankar and Beni Prasad, for Rs. 600 and Rs. 300, respectively. The property mortgaged consisted of two houses. The Court of first instance dismissed the claim on the basis of the mortgage of the 6th of December 1913 and decreed the claim on the basis of the mortgage of the 26th of May 1913. The defendant alone appealed and on appeal the lower Appellate Court dismissed the claim also on the basis of the deed of the 26th of May 1913. The plaintiff has come here in second appeal and the contention is that the decision on the point of law raised in the Court below by that Court is incorrect and that on a true interpretation of the law the claim under the bond of 26th of May 1913 should have been decreed and the lower Appellate Court ought to have dismissed the appeal in respect thereto. We are concerned only with the mortgage of the 26th of May 1913. Gauri Shankar and Beni Prasad were judgment-debtors under two decrees. One was obtained against them by Koka Mal who applied for execution and in execution attached the two houses on the 9th of June 1912. Lala Mal was another decree-holder against them who apparently also applied for execution of his decree and the property having been already attached in Koka Mal's decree he applied for a rateable distribution on the 12th of February 1913. Koka Mal proceeded with his execution and the property was put up for sale and sold on the 25th of March 1913. On the 2nd of April 1913 the judgment-debtors and Koka Mal made an application to the Court stating that the decree of Koka Mal has been satisfied out of Court and asking that the sale be set aside as the decree had been satisfied. On the 26th of April 1913 the Court refused to set aside the sale on this ground, being apparently of opinion that these two persons were combining to defeat the claim of Lala Mal. However, it appears that the auction-purchaser having deposited his one-fourth at the date of sale failed to deposit the remaining three-fourths of the purchase-money and on the 24th of May 1913 the Court set aside the sale for this reason. Then comes the mortgage of the 26th of May 1913 which is the basis of the present claim. On the 20th of June 1913 Lala Mal applied for and obtained attachment of the property in execution of his own decree. On the 24th of June 1913 he applied to the Court which was executing the decree of Koka Mal and asked that rateable distribution should be allowed to him in this way, that Koka Mal be directed to bring into Court the money that he had received from the judgment-debtors in satisfaction of his decree, and that out of it he (Lala Mal) should receive his fair share. This application of his was disallowed on the 6th of July 1913. The execution of Lala Mal's decree proceeded. The property was put up to auction and was purchased by one Piare Lal who in his turn sold it to Kundan on the 12th of December 1914. Kundan is the present respondent before us. On behalf of the defendant it was urged in the Court below that the private transfer of the 26th of May 1913 was void as against him because Lala Mal had applied for a rateable distribution prior to the 26th of May 1913 and the plea is based upon the wording of the Explanation to section 44 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The learned District Judge has expressed his opinion in the following language: "The property, in my opinion, remained under attachment until the order of the 5th of July 1913 and, in view of the Explanation attached to section 64 of the Civil Procedure Code, Lala Mal's claim for rateable distribution was undoubtedly enforceable under that attachment and the sale-deed of the 26th of May 1913 is, therefore, void as against the defendant-appellant."

We are referred on behalf of the plaintiff respondent to the Privy Council ruling in Mina Kumari Bibi v. Bijoy Singh Dudhuria (1), but that ruling is under the old Civil Procedure Code and it is argued that it is not applicable to the present case. The question is one which was considered by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Annamalai Chettiar v. Palamalai Pillai (2), and in that case the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council was considered, and it was clearly held that the Explanation attached to section 64 had not materially advanced the benefits of execution creditors who had applied for rateable distribution. The decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council is also quite clear on the point. If we apply the ratio decidendi of that judgment to the facts of the present case it is quite clear that the right of Kundan is a right which is enforceable not under the attachment of the 9th of June 1912 but under the attachment by Lala Mal of the 20th of June 1913. His rights cannot be referred in any way to the prior attachment but only to the subsequent attachment which was also subsequent to the mortgage of the 26th of May 1913. We do not think it necessary to add anything to the very cogent reasons to be found in the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court. We fully agree with that decision, and, in our opinion, the decision of the Court below was incorrect. The result is that we allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and restore that of the Court of first instance. The plaintiff will have his costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court as against the defendant-respondent. Costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—This appeal comes to us from an order of the District Judge of Gaya, dated the 20th of November 1919, dismissing an application of the appellant for his being adjudged an insolvent under the Insolvency Act (Act III of 1907). The petition for insolvency was filed on the 24th of June 1919, and, after certain amendments in order to make the application conform to the requirements of the Act, the petition was admitted on the 2nd of July 1919 and necessary notices under section 12 of the Act were issued. The applicant was examined on the 15th of November 1919 and the order of the Court was passed on the 20th of November dismissing the application.

The grounds for which the learned District Judge has dismissed the application are as follows: (1) that the applicant allowed the pilgrim register containing the names of pilgrims allotted to him on partition to remain with his brothers; (2) that he removed his place of residence; (3) that he inserted fictitious amounts and dates of some of the debts, and (4) that he gave false account of his present income.

None of these grounds appear to be valid for the dismissal of the application under section 15 (1) of the Act which has been relied upon by the Court below. The Court has not held that the applicant had no right to make the application in question. In fact, the petition filed by him clearly sets forth his liabilities for exceeding Rs. 500 fixed by section 6, clause (a) of the Act in order to entitle him to make an application under the Act. The applicant further supported his statement in the petition by a sworn affidavit. He was, therefore, entitled to an adjudication required by section 5 of the Act. No doubt, that section gives certain discretion to the Court to refuse an application, for the Court is not bound to adjudge an applicant insolvent under that section; but there must be clearly made out a proper case for the dismissal of the application, namely, an abuse of the process of the Court, or a deliberate attempt on behalf of the debtor to defeat the creditors. The Court below has not held that the applicant was guilty of the aforesaid charges and, therefore, the discretion used by the Court is unwarranted and there was no option left to the Court but to adjudge the petitioner an insolvent under section 5 of the Act.

The first clause of section 15 (1), which entitles the Court to dismiss an application when it is not satisfied with the proof of the right to present the petition or of the service of notice on the debtor, as required by section 12, sub-section (3), has obviously no application for the right to present the petition was conclusively proved in this case and has not been found to be otherwise by the Court below, and no question of notice on the debtor under section 12, sub-section (3), arises in this case, for the debtor himself is the applicant. As to there having been committed an act of insolvency there can be no doubt for the petition presented by the applicant himself is an act of insolvency. The second part of section 15 (1) has also no application, for that clause refers only when an application is made by a creditor under section 6 of the Act. That clause is the only one under which the debtor might object to an adjudication of an insolvency by showing that he is able to pay his debts or any other sufficient cause. The grounds referred to by the Court below are not the grounds for the dismissal of an application but grounds for refusing to discharge the insolvent under section 44 of the Act. That stage has not yet been reached.

It is needless to consider in detail the authorities quoted on both sides. The view taken appears to be in full accord with that of all the Courts of India, vide Biva Jeer Ohetty v. Bava Rangasami Ohetty (1), Girwardhari v. Jai Narain (2), Gulam Rahim v. Wakeel Ali (3), Behari Sahu v. Juthar Mall (4) and Udai Chand Maity v. Ram Kumar Khara (5).

The result is, that the order of the Court below is set aside and the applicant, who is appellant before us, is declared an insolvent under the Act. The appeal is decreed with costs.

Rose, J.—I agree.

LAL SHAHA V. KADO MAHTO.

et aside—Suit by objector against judgment-debtor—Limitation.

The intention of rule 36 of the Sonthal Parganas Civil Rules is specifically and solely to protect the decree-holder; so that where there has been a bona fide sale by a judgment-debtor of property under attachment for the purpose of paying off the decree-holder, the judgment-debtor cannot question the validity of that sale as between himself and the purchaser, and a suit for possession of the property by the purchaser against the judgment-debtor is not barred by the rule. [p. 856, col. 2.]

Where property purchased from a judgment-debtor was attached in execution of another decree against the judgment-debtor and the purchaser's objection was dismissed, but the attachment was subsequently set aside on the purchaser satisfying the decree:

Held, that a suit by the purchaser for a declaration against his vendee, the judgment-debtor, was not barred by the fact that the order dismissing his objection was not questioned or set aside by a suit within the period of limitation prescribed by Article 13 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, inasmuch as that Article had no application to the facts of the present case. [p. 856, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Deputy Commissioner and District Judge, Dumka, dated the 21st May 1918, affirming a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Deoghur, dated the 27th February 1918.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

JWALA PRASAD AND ADAMI, JJ.—(August 17, 1920).—The plaintiff is the appellant. He brought a suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Deoghur, Sonthal Parganas, (Title Suit No. 10 of 1915) under the following circumstances:—

The defendant first party, Kodo Mahto, had one anna mul raiyati interest in Mouta Barodi, Taluqa Sarawan, and his name was entered in the Settlement Record of Rights. He mortgaged this property for Rs. 260 to defendant second party who sold the mortgage-deed to defendants third party. The defendants third party obtained a mortgage-decree, in execution of which the property was attached and advertised for sale.

While the property was under attachment, on the 25th of March 1913 the defendant first party sold the property to the plaintiff by a Kobala for Rs. £95 with the object of satisfying the decree of defendant second party and protecting the property from Court sale. Accordingly, Rs. 576-9-0 was deposited in Court by Challan, dated the 20th April 1913, and the decree of defendants third party was satisfied and the execution case was struck off.

The defendants third party then instituted another suit for other money claims of theirs against the defendant first party and attached the property before judgment on the 27th April 1913.

The plaintiff then, on the basis of his Kobala of the 25th March 1913, preferred a claim in the execution proceedings of the money claim. His claim was at first allowed by the executing Court, but was ultimately disallowed by the Commissioner in appeal, on the ground that the sale was void under rule 36 of the Sonthal Civil Rules. The plaintiff then paid into Court, on the 10th March 1915, Rs. 228 2 3 to satisfy the money-decree of the defendants third party, and on the 19th November 1915 he instituted the present suit for a declaration that the sale of the property to him by defendants first party per Kobala, dated the 25th March 1913, is valid and not void, as observed by the Deputy Commissioner and the Commissioner in the execution claim case. He also claimed a refund of Rs. 228-2-3 paid by him into Court to satisfy the money-decree of defendants third party against the defendant first party.

The claim of the plaintiff so far as defendants third party were concerned was compromised during the pendency of the suit and hence no issue was framed by the Subordinate Judge as regards the consequential relief for the recovery of Rs. 228-2-3.

The suit was, therefore, tried only on the issue relating to the declaration of his title to the property in suit on the basis of his Kobala.

Defendant No. 1, the vendor, contested the suit.

The Courts below have dismissed the suit on the grounds, (1) that the sale deed was invalid; (2) that the suit was barred by limitation, and (3) that the relief by way of declaration cannot be given, inasmuch as the Specific Relief Act is not in force in the Sonthal Parganas. The plaintiff comes to this Court in second appeal.

It is undisputed, and is concluded by the concurrent findings of the Courts below, that the Kobala of the plaintiff was duly executed by the defendant on the 25th March 1913 and that the plaintiff paid the consideration-money Rs. 895 and satisfied the mortgage-decree, in execution of which it was advertised for sale. He also subsequently had to pay Rs. 228 2 3 to satisfy the decree of the defendant No. 3 against the defendant No. 1 in execution of which the property was attached on the 27th April 1913 subsequent to the plaintiff's Kobala.

It has also been found that the plaintiff is in possession of most of the properties on the basis of the sale. His name has been recorded in respect of the mul raiyati right in the village and has been recognized by the Sub-Divisional Officer.

The Kobala of the plaintiff was, therefore, bona fide executed for valuable consideration and was given effect to, he being in possession of most of the property. His title to the property is, therefore, undisputed.

The Court below accepts this and says that defendant No. 1, the vendor, having received the consideration-money is estopped from disputing the validity of the sale-deed executed by him and that the plaintiff was entitled to take this plea as a ground of defense in case of a suit being brought against him, but as a plaintiff in the present case he is not entitled to the declaration sued for, inasmuch as such a suit is barred by rule 36 of the Sonthal Civil Rules, page 87 of the Sonthal Perganas Manual, 1911, which lays down that a judgment debtor whose property is under attachment in execution of a decree "shall be incompetent to alienate or encumber the attached property." The Courts below have construed it to impose an absolute incapacity upon the judgment-debtor to alienate the attached property even for the payment of the decree in which the property was attached. The rule was obviously intended to prevent alienations to the prejudice of the attaching creditor and certainly it could not possibly have been intended to render alienation void for the purpose of satisfying the decree of the attaching creditor himself. The hardship of the interpretation will be obvious when the property of a large value is attached to pay off a nominal decree if the judgment debtor is not permitted to raise money on that property or to alienate a portion of it to satisfy his debt. No doubt, the wording of the section is different from that in the present Code of Civil Procedure (V of 1905) but under the earlier Codes of Civil Procedure words more stringent than those in the Sonthal Civil Rules in question were held not to affect the alienation made for the satisfaction of the decree in which the property was attached. Section 240 of Act VIII of 1859 had enacted that alienation "during the continuance of the attachment shall be null and void." The Courts in India always held that these words were not to be taken in the widest possible sense as null and void against all the world including even the vendor, but they should be taken in the comparatively limited sense and that the object was to make the sale null and void so far as it was necessary to secure the execution of the decree and to prevent only such alienation as would affect the creditor who obtained the attachment. In the case of Anund Loll Doss v. Jullodhur Shaw (1) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee accepted this as being the true meaning of the section. Their Lordships further observed: "It could scarcely be held, in fact it was scarcely maintained in argument, that a sale made to a bona fide purchaser by the vendor could be set aside by the vendor himself. The words must, therefore, be read with some limitation. . . . They were intended for the protection of the creditor who had obtained execution."

The corresponding section 64 (Act V of 1908) in the Code of Civil Procedure is the result of the interpretation put upon the earlier section by the Courts in India as well as by their Lordships of the Privy Council. Rule 36 of the Sonthal Civil Rules must also be similarly construed. It does not, therefore, affect the sale in the present case, inasmuch as out of the consideration-money the mortgage-decree in which the vendored property was attached, was satisfied. The vendor at least cannot take advantage of the rule and question the validity of the sale as clearly held by their Lordships.

The Courts below are, therefore, wrong in holding that the sale was invalid under rule 33 of the Sonthal Civil Rules.

The next ground upon which the suit has been dismissed by the Courts below is limitation. The Courts below have held that the Commissioner's order in the claim suit declaring that the sale of the property was null and void, was passed on the 19th

(1) 14 M. L. A. 543; 17 W. R. 313; 10 B. L. R. 134; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 558; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 81; 20 E. R. 558.

LAL SHAHA v. KADO MAHTO.

November 1914, and that, under Article 13 of the Limitation Act, the suit should have been brought within one year from that date. The suit having been brought on the 20th November 1915, was late by one day.

The plaintiff does not claim "to alter or set aside" the order of the Commissioner, and hence Article 13 has no application. In fact, he will not gain anything by having the order set aside. He simply wants a declaration that the sale was valid, and not void. The suit is governed by Article 120 of the Limitation Act and is not barred; vide Luchmi Narain Singh v. Atsrup Koer (2) and Koylash Ohunder Paul Chowdhury v. Preonath Roy Chowdhury (3). The suit of the plaintiff is, therefore, not barred and the view taken by the Courts below is wrong.

The last ground upon which the suit has been thrown out is, that the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) is not in force in Sonthal Parganas and, therefore, the declaratory relief sought for by the plaintiff cannot be granted.

In the case of Satya Narayan Chackravarti v. Dwarka Nath Saha (4), Mullick and Atkinson, JJ., held that the Specific Relief Act did not apply to the Sonthal Parganas. This view was subsequently doubted in the case of Tekait Deg Narain Singh v. Bhuk Lal Raut (5) decided by Contts and Adami, JJ., and it was observed that the question whether the Sonthal Parganas is a scheduled district was not considered in the previous case. There is, however, no room for this doubt, inasmuch as the Sonthal Parganas is mentioned in Schedule I, Part 3 of Act XIV of 1874, section 1 of which defines "scheduled districts" to mean the territories mentioned in the First Schedule annexed to that Act. Therefore, the Sonthal Parganas is a scheduled district. The view has been recently adopted by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Maha Prasad Singh v. Ramni

Mohan Singh (6). The operation of the Specific Relief Act has been expressly excluded from the Sonthal Parganas by section 1 of the Act.

The fact that the value of the suit was over Rs. 1,000 does not at all affect the question. No doubt, under section 2 of Act XXXVII of 1855, read with section 3 of Regulation III of 1872 and section 9 of Regulation V of 1903, the General Laws and Regulations will apply to the trial of suits in the Sonthal Parganas, the value of which exceeds Rs. 1,000. But this, to my mind, will not extend the Specific Relief Act to such suits when it has been expressly excluded from the Sonthal Parganas. Besides, as observed by Mullick and Atkinson, JJ., the Act is not proprio vigore in force in the whole of British India and hence the aforesaid provisions in the Sonthal Parganas Laws will not make the Specific Relief Act applicable to suits the value of which exceeds Rs. 1,000. Thus, to my mind, the Specific Relief Act does not apply to the Sonthal Parganas whatever be the value of the suit.

The question then arises as to whether, apart from the Specific Relief Act, the reliefs contemplated by the Act can be granted in suits in the Sonthal Parganas. Obity and Richardson, JJ., in the case of Janardan Mahato v. Ekirab Ohandra Montal (7) answered this in the affirmative and held that, although the Specific Relief Act was not applicable to the Sonthal Parganas, a prayer for specific performance of a contract can be granted upon the principles of justice, equity and good conscience. Their Lordships, Mr. Justice Mullick and Mr. Justice Atkinson, disagreed with this view and held that the principles of the Act which are of a highly technical character cannot be extended to a locality which the Government of the country has expressly declared to be unfit for the operation of the Act. This view was doubted subsequently by their Lordships, Contts and Adami, JJ., in the case Tekait Deg Narain Singh v. Bhuk Lal Raut (5) referred to above. Their Lordships observed that, as the value of the suit was over Rs. 1,000 the Code of Civil Procedure of 1859 applied to the suit under which declaratory reliefs could be granted subject to the condition that there were circumstances which might justify the grant of consequential reliefs and hence, before 1877, such reliefs were maintainable in the Sonthal Parganas irrespective of the Specific Relief Act. No doubt, that case was distinguishable in that there was a prayer for an injunction as a consequential relief. But the aforesaid observation is certainly contrary to the view expressed in the earlier case of a Division Bench of this Court referred to above. It is, therefore, necessary to consider this in some details.

The history of section 15 in the Civil Procedure Code of 1859 is given in the judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Strimathoo Moothoo Vija Ragoonadah Kolanapurwee Natchiar v. Dorasinga Tevar (8). It was first introduced in this country in section 19 of Act VI of 1854. The provision is precisely in the same words as the English enactment, 15 and 16 Vict., c. 126, section 50. In the opinion of their Lordships, expressed at pages 178 179, no such power was possessed by the Courts in India before that. The trial of suits of value exceeding Rs. 1,000 in the Sonthal Parganas is regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure for the time being in force. Hence, a right to obtain merely declaratory relief existed in such a suit in the Sonthal Parganas under section 15 of Act VIII of 1859, without granting consequential relief. If the present suit were governed by the Civil Procedure Code of 1859, the plaintiff in the present case would certainly be entitled to the declaration of his title to the land in suit, inasmuch as he was entitled to ask for consequential relief for the possession of some of the properties in suit of which he was out of possession, as held by the Subordinate Judge. According to the learned Subordinate Judge consequential relief could have been given to the plaintiff if he had asked for it and paid proper Court-fee. The condition laid down in the aforesaid decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council at page 187 of the report, for a declaratory decree, that there should be "a right to consequential relief capable of being had in the same Court or in certain cases in some other Court", is fully satisfied in this case.

The plaintiff, no doubt, actually prayed for consequential relief in this case, namely, to recover Rs. 228-2-3 from the defendant 3rd party, but this relief was not actually tried, inasmuch as the claim for money was compromised between the plaintiff and the defendant No. 3 during the pendency of the suit and the case proceeded only upon the declaratory issue. If the suit could still be regarded as a suit for recovery of money on declaration of plaintiff's title to the property in suit, the question whether declaratory relief could or could not be given in the Sonthal Parganas would not arise. But this is doubtful, inasmuch as the claim for money was finally settled between the parties and the consequential relief ceased to exist thereafter. This may also be gathered from the aforesaid case of the Privy Council.

The plaintiff is entitled to his decree only if the right to a declaratory decree created in the Sonthal Parganas by section 15 of the old Code of Civil Procedure could still be deemed to be in force in that territory. Section 15 of Act VIII of 1859 was deleted from the subsequent Code of Civil Procedure, and instead the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) was introduced with more comprehensive and detailed provisions relating to specific reliefs. Now, under this Act declaratory reliefs can be given in British India, except the scheduled districts, of which the Sonthal Parganas is one. The new Code of Civil Procedure is now in force in the Sonthal Parganas by virtue of section 10 of Act V of 1903 and section 153 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908). Act VIII of 1859 is no longer in force in the Sonthal Parganas. The new Code of Civil Procedure does not make provision for declaratory decrees. Thus, although at one time declaratory decrees could be made in suits in the Sonthal Parganas, it is doubtful whether they can be made now.

of the uncivilised condition of the people of the Pargana, as is stated in the preamble of Act XXXVII of 1855. In 1859, it was considered fit to receive the benefit of declaratory decrees, and there is no reason why it should not be considered fit to continue to exercise that right now. There does not, therefore, appear to be the intention of the Legislature to take away this relief. But if the law, as it at present stands, makes it impossible to construe it in favour of the right having been continued, the intention of the Legislature will be of no avail. Their Lordships, Chitty and Richardson, JJ., would extend the principles of the Specific Relief Act to the Sonthal Parganas on grounds of justice, equity and good conscience, vide Janardan Mahato v. Bhairab Chandra Mondal (7). But in face of the express exclusion of the Specific Relief Act from the Sonthal Parganas, and in view of the declaratory reliefs being a special mode of relief introduced recently in England and in this country, it is doubtful whether the considerations of equity, justice and good conscience would entitle a Court to grant the reliefs in that locality without any legislation.

The point is not free from difficulty and cases of this nature are frequently arising in the Sonthal Parganas. There has been difference of opinion among the learned Judges of this Court as well as of the Calcutta High Court. We, therefore, consider it necessary to refer this case to the learned Chief Justice for constituting a larger Bench for the decision of the points involved in this case.

The points referred to are as follows:—

(1) Whether a Court in the Sonthal Parganas can refuse to grant a declaratory decree in a suit the value of which exceeds Rs. 1,000 simply because no consequential relief is prayed for?

(2) Whether an alienation of a property under attachment of a Civil Court decree made by a judgment-debtor for the purpose of satisfying the claim of the attaching creditor is invalid under rule 36 of the Sonthal Civil Rules; and can the judgment-debtor be permitted to question the validity of the purchase made by the vendee for bona fide and valuable consideration? and

(3) Whether Article 13 of the Limitation

Act applies to the present suit for declaration of title based on a deed already held to be invalid in execution proceedings, no prayer to set aside or vary the order of the executing Court being made?

Messrs. S. M. Mullick, J. Prasad and N. N. Sen, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This case came before a Division Bench of this Court on appeal from a decision of the Deputy Commissioner and District Judge of Dumka, dated the 21st May 1918. The facts in the case may be shortly stated. The defendant first party, Kado Mahto, was the proprietor of a one-anna share in Mauza Barodi which he mortgaged to the defendants second party, who in turn assigned their mortgage to the defendant third party, Kali Charan Sabu. Kali Charan then got a decree on the mortgage-bond and attached the property in suit. On the 25th March 1913, whilst the property was under attachment, Kado Mahto, the original proprietor, sold the property to the plaintiff for the sum of Rs. 895. That sale was made with a view to satisfying the decree obtained by Kali Charan and consequently to avoid the sale of the property. Out of the proceeds of the sale to the plaintiff, the decretal amount under the mortgage-decree was paid into Court on the 20th April 1913 and the execution-case was accordingly struck off. Kali Charan, it appeared, had a further claim against the defendant first party, Kado Mahto, and he instituted a suit to recover the amount due, and before judgment attached the same property on the 27th April 1913. If the sale made to the plaintiff by Kado Mahto was valid and subsisting, it followed that the attachment of the property by Kali Charan for a debt due from Kado Mahto was not a valid attachment and the plaintiff thereupon entered an objection to the attachment made by Kali Charan. His objection was, in the first instance, allowed by the Deputy Collector and that decision was affirmed by the Collector. But on appeal to the Deputy Commissioner the decision was overruled and that decision, which went on revision to the Commissioner, was upheld. The ground upon which the objection to the attachment was dismissed by the Deputy Commissioner and the Commissioner was that, under rule 36 of the Sonthal Civil Rules, it is provided that, where property is attached in proceedings before the Courts mentioned in those rules and the attachment is published in the manner directed thereafter, the judgment-debtor shall be incompetent to alienate or encumber the attached property. The plaintiff, having failed to get the attachment set aside, in order to stay the sale of the property, was compelled to pay into Court the amount of the decree for which Kali Charan had sued. He accordingly paid into Court the sum of Rs. 228 and some odd annas in order to satisfy the claim of Kali Charan, and that claim having been satisfied, all further proceedings in that suit came to an end with the result that the property was released from attachment. The plaintiff, considering that he was aggrieved by having had to pay into Court the sum of Rs. 228, and considering further that there was some cloud cast upon his title by the decision of the Sonthal Parganas Court, brought the present suit claiming a declaration that the sale by which he purchased the property from Kado Mahto on the 25th March 1913 was a valid and subsisting sale and not void as stated in the execution claim. He further claimed, as consequential relief, the payment back from Kali Charan of the sum of Rs. 228-2-3 which he had paid into Court to satisfy the latter's claim. He did not claim possession of the property, although it was found by the lower Court that he was out of possession of a portion thereof.

When the case came before the Subordinate Judge he dismissed the claim on various grounds. First of all, he decided that the Kobala under which the plaintiff claimed was not valid, because a sale, such as that under which the plaintiff claimed, he considered was void under rule 36 of the Sonthal Civil Rules. He further came to the conclusion that the suit was one in the nature of a suit to set aside a decision or order of a Civil Court in any proceeding other than a suit and that it was governed by Article 13 of the Limitation Act, and, as the suit had been instituted more than one year after the date when the execution case in which the plaintiff's objection had been made and decided, he thought that the suit was barred by Limitation. The learned Subordinate Judge also came to the conclusion that the Specific Relief Act was not in force in the Sonthal Parganas and that a suit claiming a declaration in the terms stated in the plaint was bad in law.

That decision was affirmed upon appeal to the Deputy Commissioner.

The matter then came before this Court and, in a considered judgment, the Court came to the conclusion that the reasons given by the lower Appellate Court for its decision could not stand but as it thought the points were not free from difficulty and were frequently arising in this Court it referred the matter to a Full Bench for determination. The points of law which have been raised for our determination are,—

- (1) Whether a Court in the Sonthal Parganas can refuse to grant a declaratory decree in a suit, the value of which exceeds Rs. 1,000, simply because no consequential relief is prayed for?
- (2) Whether an alienation of a property under attachment of a Civil Court decree made by a judgment-debtor for the purpose of satisfying the claim of the attaching creditor is invalid under rule 33 of the Sonthal Civil Rules; can the judgment-debtor be permitted to question the validity of the purchase made by the vendee for bona fide and valuable consideration? and
- (3) Whether Article 13 of the Limitation Act applies to the present suit for declaration of title based on a deed already held to be invalid in execution proceedings, no prayer to set aside or vary the order of the executing Court being made?

With regard to the first point, it was urged by the learned Vakil on behalf of the appellant that this is not a suit merely for a declaration because what is asked for is not merely a declaration of the validity of his purchase but consequential relief in the nature of a claim to recover back Rs. 228 paid into Court in the execution proceeding in the previous suit. So far as that is concerned, that portion of the claim had been settled before the case came to this Court and, therefore, there is no consequential relief any longer claimed in this suit and, consequently, it becomes unnecessary for the Court to deal merely with the question of the declaration, unless it is satisfied that this is the class of case in which a declaration ought to be granted apart from any consequential relief sought. As it appears, however, that the plaintiff is out of possession of some portions of the property he now asks that his plaint may be amended by claiming that he may be put in possession of that part in respect of which he has been held to be out of possession and he has declared his willingness to pay an ad valorem Court-fee upon the valuation of the property as stated in the plaint. That being so, it follows that the claim should not be treated as one coming under the Specific Relief Act and asking merely for a declaration of title without any consequential relief. In the circumstances, therefore, the first question submitted to us does not really arise, because this being a case asking not for a declaration of title only, but also for consequential relief, there can be no doubt as to the jurisdiction of the Court.

With regard to the second question, it is unnecessary to deal with this at any length. The judgment of the Court which referred the matter to us has dealt at some length with this point and we are entirely in agreement with the conclusion arrived at by them. That conclusion is based upon a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Anund Loll Doss v. Jul'odhur Shaw (1), which dealt with the effect of section 240 of Act VIII of 1859, where the words were, if anything, more stringent than the words used in rule 6 of the Sonthal Civil Rules. The words in section 240 of the Act of 1859 were that, an alienation during the continuance of the attachment shall be null and void. Their Lordships in that case observed: "It could scarcely be held, in fact it was scarcely maintained in argument, that a sale made to a bona fide purchaser by the vendor could be set aside by the vendor himself. The words must, therefore, be read with some limitation... They were intended for the protection of the creditor who had obtained execution." Although that decision is not a decision upon the particular rule in question, there can be no doubt that the principle there applied applies with equal, if not greater, force to the present case and, looking at the rule as it stands, we have no doubt whatever that the intention of that rule was specifically and solely to protect the decree-holder. Where there has been a bona fide sale by the judgment-debtor of the property for the purpose of paying off the decree-holder, then it does not lie in the mouth of the judgment-debtor to question the validity of that sale as between himself and the purchaser.

With regard to the third question submitted, whether Article 13 of the Limitation Act applies to the present suit, we consider that that Article has no application. The suit is not one in effect to set aside the decision of the executing Court nor is it necessary that that decision should be set aside before the plaintiff is entitled to institute the present suit. All that was decided in the execution proceedings was, that the attachment should not be set aside. That was the decision. Incidentally the Court had to come to the conclusion that the purchase made by the present plaintiff was not a valid purchase, but that attachment has subsequently been set aside by payment into Court of the amount due to the decree-holder and, therefore, in so far as that decision had any binding and valid effect, it is quite unnecessary for present purposes that the order therein made should be set aside at all nor indeed does the plaintiff seek to have it set aside. So far as his claim for the Rs. 228 is concerned, it might have created a difficulty on that point. But that has already been settled and, therefore, we are no longer concerned with that, but it is perfectly clear to our minds that the present suit for a declaration is in no way barred by limitation merely by reason of the fact that a suit to alter or set aside the decision or order of the Civil Court in any other proceeding in the suit under Article 13 of the Limitation Act is barred within one year. As already stated, the present is not such a suit, nor is it necessary that such a suit should be brought as a condition precedent to the present suit. In our opinion, this appeal ought to be allowed with costs to the appellant before the Trial Court and the lower Appellate Court, but as no one appeared for the respondents in the High Court there will be no order as to costs.

KANHYA LAL V. JAGANNATH PERSHAD-HANUMAN PERSHAD,

either in this appeal or in the appeal before the Division Bench. The appellant will be entitled to a declaration of his title to the property in suit and an order for possession of that portion of the property of which he has been found by the lower Courts to be out of possession. This decree will not be executed until the appellant has paid the Court-fee appropriate to a suit claiming a consequential relief in the nature of possession. The deficit under this head he has reckoned at Rs. 183. This matter may be referred to the Stamp Reporter to check and report thereon. The plaint will be amended by adding thereto a prayer claiming confirmation of possession, or if he should be found out of possession then that possession should be granted to him. Let the plaint be amended accordingly.

After an order of reference to arbitration, it is too late for either party to object to the form of the proceedings anterior to the reference or to the form of the issues [p. 868, col. 1.]

Where after the submission of an award the Court reverses the order of reference to arbitration and sets aside the award on the sole ground of some supposed defect in the order of reference, it acts with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction within the meaning of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code [p. 868, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

WALSH, J.—In this case a suit was brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore by a firm named Jagannath Prasad, etc., against one Kanhya Lal, who was alleged to be 22 years of age, for damages for non-delivery of goods. The defendant alleged infancy, and a written statement was filed upon his behalf by one Lachmi Narain in which the contract was denied, and the defenses of infancy, and of wagering were set up. Issues were settled by the Judge on the 9th January 1919. The question of the defendant's minority was separately tried, and was decided against him in March. When the day for the trial, in May, arrived the parties decided to refer their dispute to arbitration, and the issues which had been struck were, by order of Court, referred to an arbitrator, who made an award on the 23rd June in favour of the defendant, holding that, although the defendant was of age, there had been no contract, and dismissing the suit.

On the 25th June the plaintiff filed objections in the Court of the Subordinate Judge praying that the award be set aside. These objections alleged, (1) Fraud and collusion between the defendant and the arbitrator, and necessarily, therefore, misconduct by the arbitrator; (2) Failure by the defendant to file a written statement of his own after the decision against him as to his age, and (3) Further trumpery complaints of the nature of misconduct against the arbitrator not necessary to particularize here.

On the 16th of September, in spite of the fact that the defendant had adopted the written statement of Lachmi Narain, and that the issues originally settled had been expressly referred to the arbitrator by the Court, the Subordinate Judge held that the absence of a further written statement by the defendant invalidated the reference and the arbitration, and that, therefore, the award was invalid, and he set it aside. The defendant now applies to this Court in revision to quash the order, and an objection is raised to the jurisdiction of this Court to interfere. This objection gives rise to a technical question of some difficulty.

The decision of the Subordinate Judge is clearly indefensible. The ground upon which he has interfered is no ground at all for questioning either the arbitration proceedings, or the award. Both parties were bound by the order of reference as to all matters covered by it, including the pleadings as they then stood, and the issues as settled. After the order of reference, it was too late for either party to object to the form of the proceedings anterior to the reference, or to the form of the issues. The defendant could not have done so himself, and the plaintiff had less ground, if possible, than the defendant for objecting to the absence of a fresh written statement as the prejudice, if any, would affect the defendant alone. The ground upon which the learned Judge has acted is, in fact, an objection to the decision of the arbitrator in the guise of an objection to the proceedings of the Trial Court, and the decision of the Subordinate Judge amounts to a reversal of the order of reference passed by the same Court, without any change in the circumstances, except the execution of the order by the holding of the arbitration and the making of the award. In other words, it is equivalent to an order refusing to stay the suit where there has been not only an agreement, but an order to refer to arbitration. It is not so in terms, otherwise it would be appealable under section 104.

In the course of the argument, we were referred to the case of Ghulam Khan v. Mohammad Hassan (1), the leading authority in the Privy Council on Arbitration Law as laid down in the Civil Procedure Code, and to that of Lutawan v. Lachiya (2), a Full Bench decision of this High Court reported in 12 Allahabad Law Journal 57. In both cases a decree had been passed in accordance with, and not in excess of, an award, so that the point to be decided differed from the question now raised. It is necessary, therefore, to examine the principles established by those cases, which are, of course, binding upon us.

Their Lordships point out that the Code deals with arbitrations under three heads. Only the first of these need concern us, namely, where the parties to a litigation refer to arbitration any matter in the suit, so that all proceedings are under the supervision of the Trial Court. Subject to that, an arbitrator has a free hand. If he proceeds regularly, and decides the matters referred to him and no others, he may make any error of law or fact with reference to the matters actually in dispute without power of redress to any party, and if the award is duly made and an application to set it aside is refused by the Trial Court, that Court has no option but to pronounce a decree in accordance with it. Against such decree there is no appeal. Turning to Schedule II of the Code, paragraph 15 provides the grounds upon which an award may be set aside. Since the case of Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (1) (supra) was decided, the words "or being otherwise invalid" have been added, without in any way affecting the decision or the reasons given by their Lordships of the Privy Council. But reasoning mainly from that expression the Members of the Full Bench in Lutawan v. Lachiya (2) were unanimous in saying that the original Court, and no other, should decide any objections to the award on the ground of invalidity from any cause whatever. That is to say, the "otherwise invalid" must not be construed as eiusdem generis with what has gone before it. Accepting to the full that construction, it is necessary to point out that some limitation must be placed upon the words so construed. They cannot mean that a decision merely adopting an idle or wanton objection, however absurd and irrelevant, would be a decision of "invalidity from any cause whatever." We think the meaning to be put upon the language of the Full Bench is, that the decision must be a real decision of some ground, no matter what, which, if it existed, would invalidate an award. In fact, paragraph 15 prescribes and delimits the jurisdiction of the original Court: "No award," it says, "shall be set aside except, etc." The ground taken and adopted in the decision of this case is no ground affecting the validity of the award at all.

KANHYA LAL v. JAGANNATH PERSHAD-HANUMAN PERSHAD.

It is merely a decision that the Court ought not to have referred. Is that a matter affecting the validity of the award once the dispute has been referred? On this point their Lordships say [Ghulam Shan v. Mohammad Hassan (1)]: "In cases falling under Head I" (as this case now does) "the agreement to refer and the application to the Court founded upon it must have the concurrence of all parties concerned and the actual reference is the order of the Court. So that no question can arise as to the regularity of the proceedings up to that point." The decision before us in fact questions their regularity, and is based upon it. It appears, therefore, to us that the Judge has travelled outside his jurisdiction as expounded by the Privy Council, without deciding any ground in any way affecting the validity of the award. In the ordinary way revision would, therefore, lie. The Privy Council, however, have pointed out in Ghulam's case (1) that in cases where an attempt is made to review, or avoid the decision by arbitration on the merits, revision is more objectionable than an appeal, because the finality of the award would be open to question. But in Ghulam's case (1) they took pains to explain that the application in revision was avowedly an application to set aside the award, and also (page 183) that the Judge in the original Court had not exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law, or failed to exercise his jurisdiction, or acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction with material irregularity. In our opinion, the Judge in this case had no jurisdiction to reverse the order of reference, which he has in substance done, and in setting aside the award on the sole ground of some supposed defect in the order of reference, which was irrelevant, he has acted with material irregularity.

We have taken pains to make the position clear, as, although the result of our order will be to restore to the award that finality which the Legislature intended, it must not be supposed that we desire to depart, or have in any way departed, from the principle of inviolability which attaches to decisions, either upholding or rejecting objections under paragraph 15, when they are in fact decisions upon real objections of invalidity to the arbitration proceedings and award.

The order of the Court is, that the order of the Subordinate Judge of the 20th September 1919 be set aside, and the application to have a decree passed in accordance with the award be restored to the file of the Court to be dealt with according to law. The plaintiff must pay the costs in this Court and of the proceedings in the Court below.

PICCOTT, J.—I agree that the order complained of is quite unsustainable, and I am clearly of opinion that the defendant must be allowed some legal remedy against it, so that the only proper ending to the suit, necessarily, is a decree dismissing the same in accordance with the award of the arbitrator. The difficulty which has been discussed in the judgment of my learned brother, strikes me as in substance a question only of procedure. I have myself long inclined to the view that, under the present Code of Civil Procedure, the intention of the Legislature was to impose a somewhat stringent limit on the revisional jurisdiction of this Court by the use of the words, "any case which has been decided," in section 115, but at the same time to open a wide door of relief to litigants who have been prejudiced by errors of procedure on the part of the Trial Court by means of the provisions of section 105. I certainly think that those Hon'ble Judges who are disposed to accept the more rigid view of the effect of section 115, to which I have above referred, ought to be prepared to give a very liberal interpretation to the words "affecting the decision of the case" in section 105. Possibly, if I were certain that my own individual view in this matter would prevail, not only at this stage but throughout this particular litigation, I might be disposed to hold that the proper course for the defendant was to wait for the final decree of the Trial Court and to challenge the order setting aside the award in his memorandum of appeal, in the event of the suit ending in a decree against him. I am aware, however, that there is considerable conflict of judicial opinion over the interpretation of the words, "affecting the decision of the case" in section 105, Civil Procedure Code, and I certainly think it would be unjust to the defendant if he were to fail in the present application by reason of any doubts I might entertain as to the applicability of this Court's revisional jurisdiction and later on be deprived of his remedy by way of appeal on account of any judicial opinion regarding the operation of section 105 of the same Code. For these reasons, subject only to this reservation, that I do not stand committed to the proposition that an order like the one here complained of could not be challenged in a petition of appeal under section 105, I concur in the order which has been passed.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Birendra Chandra Dey, for the Appellants.—The facts of the case are briefly these. The suit was for recovery of possession of seven plots of land on declaration of plaintiff's title thereto. There was a proceeding under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure between the parties with regard to all the plots in suit, in which the defendants were the first party and the plaintiff was the second party. On the 14th October 1909 the parties had entered into a deed referring their dispute under section 145 case and also other matters to the arbitration of five Pleaders. In the deed it was provided, amongst other things, that the defendants first party were to reap the standing crops and take possession of the game. On the basis of these provisions, the Magistrate, on the 15th October 1909, made an order to the effect that the defendants first party would remain in possession. The present suit was instituted on the 23rd November 1915. The learned Munsif held that the suit having been instituted more than three years after the date of the order of the learned Magistrate in the section 145 case was barred under Article 47 of the Indian Limitation Act. On appeal by the plaintiff, the lower Appellate Court held that the compromise referring the dispute to arbitration, when brought to the notice of the Magistrate, ousted his jurisdiction and, therefore, the order of the learned Magistrate was ultra vires. The learned Judge in that view of the case held that the suit was not barred under Article 47 of the Indian Limitation Act and decreed the suit accordingly. The defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 8 have, therefore, appealed to this Court. My contention is that, under Article 47 of the Indian Limitation Act, a person bound by an order under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure has to sue for possession within three years from the date of the Magistrate's order. The question that would consequently next arise, therefore, would be whether the order of the Magistrate was binding on the parties. Here the Magistrate's order was passed on the admissions contained in the deed referring the dispute to the arbitrators and was, therefore, legal and valid. Even if the Magistrate's order be held to be not warranted by the provisions of section 145, clause (4), the order at most would be illegal and not a nullity. The Magistrate had jurisdiction to institute the proceedings under section 145 and if, instead of dropping the proceedings under the circumstances, the Magistrate passed an order in favour of the defendants first party he acted illegally in the exercise of his jurisdiction. The order must be without jurisdiction in the strict sense of the term and not in the loose sense in which it is used for the purpose of section 15 of the Charter Act. Refers to Paladugu Parasuramayya v. Valli Ramachandradu (1), Yar Mohammad Saha v. Hayat Mohammad Saha (2). The Magistrate's order though illegal is valid and binding on the parties, until reversed by a superior Court. Refers to Mungul Pershad Ditch v. Grista Kant Lahira Chowdhury (3). Here the order, even conceding the same to be illegal, was not set aside by any superior Court and is, therefore, binding on the parties. The suit having been brought more than six years from the date of the order by the Magistrate is, therefore, barred by Article 47 of the Indian Limitation Act.

Babu Hemendra Kumar Das (with him Babu Jotindra Mohon Choudhury), for the Respondents.—The appeal is concluded by the findings of fact. The fact that the matter was settled by the arbitrators was brought to the notice of the Magistrate before the passing of the final order. But, therefore, the effect of that in doing away with the dispute which was the subject-matter of the proceedings under section 145 was not considered by the Magistrate which he was bound to do. Refers to clause (5) of section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. The cases referred to in Paladugu Parasuramayya v. Valli Ramachandradu (1) and Yar Mohammad Saha v. Hayat Mohammad Saha (2), are clearly distinguishable. Hence I submit, the matter having been settled by the award of the arbitrators, the Magistrate was not any longer competent to deal with it under section 145. That being so, the provisions of Article 47, Limitation Act, do not at all affect my case. The case would be governed, as has been rightly by the learned Judge, by Article 142, and not Article 47.

Babu Birendra Chandra Dev, replied in brief.

by three of the defendants in a suit for recovery of possession of land on establishment of title.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit as barred by limitation under Article 47 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act.

Upon appeal the Subordinate Judge has held that the case is governed, not by Article 47 but by Article 142, and has made a decree in favour of the plaintiff with regard to five of the plots in suit.

On the present appeal, the decision of the Subordinate Judge has been challenged on the ground that Article 47 should have been held applicable. In our opinion, this contention is not well-founded.

Article 47 provides that a suit "by any person bound by an order respecting the possession of immoveable property made under the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1893 . . . . or by any one claiming under such person, to recover the property comprised in such order" must be instituted within three years from the date of the final order in the case. It cannot be disputed that, to attract the operation of Article 47, it must be shown that the order mentioned was an order made with jurisdiction, for if the order was made without jurisdiction, there is not, in the eye of law, an impediment to be removed, and the person who instituted the suit cannot be deemed to be bound thereby. In the present case, the plaintiff contended that the order under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code was made without jurisdiction. The records of the proceeding under section 145 have been destroyed and the only proof of the order is an entry in the register of criminal proceedings which shows that, on the 15th October 1902, the Magistrate made an order that the disputed land do remain in the possession of the first party. Prima facie, an order of this description was made with jurisdiction. But the plaintiff has given evidence to establish, and that evidence has been accepted by the Subordinate Judge, that on the 14th October 1902 the disputing parties referred the matters in difference between them to arbitration. The submission has been produced and shows that the parties had come to a settlement as to the possession of the disputed property. They had agreed that the produce would be taken by one of the parties, while the other would receive mesne profits, and that they would hold possession according to such decision as might be given by the arbitrators. The evidence further shows that this reference to arbitration was brought to the notice of the Magistrate before the order was made on the day following. Consequently, the case was covered by sub-section (5) of section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which provides as follows:—"Nothing in this section shall preclude any party so required to attend, or any other person interested, from showing that no such dispute as aforesaid exists or has existed, and in such case, the Magistrate shall cancel his said order and all further proceedings thereon shall be stayed, but, subject to such cancellation, the order of the Magistrate under sub-section (1) shall be final." In the case before us what happened was that, after the initial order of the Magistrate had been made with jurisdiction, the dispute between the parties ceased and there was no longer an apprehension of a breach of the peace. Consequently, it became incumbent on the Magistrate to cancel his order. The fact that he did not cancel the order cannot give validity to the order that he made. This view is supported by the decisions in Kalanand Singh v. Kameshwar Singh (4) and Sadhu Biswas v. Mahamad Ali Biswas (5).

Reference has been made on behalf of the appellant to the cases of Yar Mohammad Saha v. Hyat Mohammad Saha (2) and Paladugu Parasuramayya v. Valli Ramachandradu (1), which are clearly distinguishable. In the first of these cases, there was no compromise between the disputing parties and it was impossible to say that the dispute between them had come to an end so as to terminate the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to make an order so as to avert the apprehended breach of the peace. What happened in reality was that one of the parties found his evidence so unsatisfactory that he collapsed and practically abandoned the proceeding. In the second case also, the order was not made without jurisdiction. The order was made without proper enquiry, but an order so made by a Court of competent jurisdiction cannot be said to be an order made without jurisdiction, it was at best an order made by a Court of competent jurisdiction which acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity. The same observations apply to Paladugu Parasuramayya v. Valli Ramachandradu (1), Gangadharam Aiyar v. Sankarappa Naidu (6) and Bhagwan Das v. Bhana Mal (7).

We are of opinion that in the present case the Subordinate Judge correctly held that the order under section 145 was made without jurisdiction and the suit was consequently governed by Article 142.

As regards the merits, the decision of the Subordinate Judge does not involve any error of law. The appeal is, consequently dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

The genealogical tree is as follows:—

The suit relates to the land of which Lehna Singh was the occupancy tenant. The whole land was held up to 1903 in the following shares:—

Lehna Singh	...	$\frac{1}{2}$
Bua Ditta, Bawa and Teju, sons of Nathu...	...	$\frac{1}{2}$

On the death of Lehna Singh a mutation entry was written up by the Patwari in May 1903, in which it was stated as the cause of the mutation entry, that Lehna Singh had died on the 5th November 1902. The new entry was made as follows:—

Jawahra, son of Karam Singh	...	$\frac{1}{2}$ by $\frac{1}{2}$
Musammat Utmi, widow of Bua Ditta and Bawa...	...	$\frac{1}{2}$ by $\frac{1}{2}$
Hira and Musammat Asa Dai	...	$\frac{1}{2}$ by $\frac{1}{2}$
Musammat Utmi and Bawa	...	$\frac{1}{2}$

It is evident from the new entry that not only Lehna Singh had died but Bua Ditta and Teju had also died before the date of the entry. Musammat Utmi now sues to recover possession of that share which was taken by Jawahra in 1902. Her suit has been dismissed by the learned District Judge who holds that, under section 59 of the Tenancy Act, Musammat Utmi has no right of succession to the occupancy land held by her husband's collaterals. Throughout the proceedings, it seems to have been assumed that Bua Ditta died before Lehna Singh. In this Court, however, it has been urged that Bua Ditta survived Lehna Singh and that he, therefore, succeeded to his share of Lehna Singh's land and that his widow now has a right to succeed to her husband. In support of this contention the plaintiff has produced a copy of an entry in the death register, showing that Bua Ditta died on the 8th January 1903. The defendant has, however, retaliated with a copy of an entry in the death register, showing that Lehna Singh died on the 8th February 1903. I take it that these entries are reliable, and I certainly regard them as much more reliable than the entry made in May 1903 by the Patwari, who presumably would not be very particular as to the date which he gave of the death of Lehna Singh. An incorrect entry as to date would not in any way effect the merits of the new entry which was to be made as regards ownership. I consider, therefore, that the lower Courts have rightly gone on the assumption that Bua Ditta predeceased Lehna Singh.

On behalf of the plaintiff it is urged that the tenancy was a joint tenancy and that, even if Bua Ditta died before Lehna Singh, his widow would still succeed and that Jawahra had no right whatever to take a share as he was not one of the tenants holding jointly along with Lehna Singh. Reliance is placed on two Revenue Rulings, Agar Singh v. Dhana (1) and Ohanda Singh v. Jiwan Singh (2), in support of the proposition that this was a joint tenancy. These rulings make no distinction between joint tenancies and tenancies-in-common, and have never, to the best of my knowledge, been followed by this Court; and the principle laid down by this Court [see Mohru v. Mutsaddi (3) and Khan Singh v. Hardit Singh (4)] is that, where there are defined shares in a tenancy, it is not a case of a joint tenancy but merely one of tenancy-in-common. In the present case the shares have all along been defined, and

KANDARPA NAG v. BANWARI LAL NAG.

I hold that the tenancy was not a joint tenancy and that the principle of survivorship does not apply. Under section 59 of the Tenancy Act, the widow of a collateral has no right of succession and, therefore, I consider that Musammam Utni, the present plaintiff, was not entitled to any share in the occupancy tenure of Lehna Singh. This being so, it, of course, follows that she has no right to recover possession from the son of Jawahra, even if it be assumed that Jawahra, too, had no right to get any share in the occupancy of Lehna Singh. The learned District Judge's decision dismissing the suit must, therefore, stand. I may remark that the tenancy was partitioned in 1913 and, therefore, in any case, the plaintiff would only be entitled to recover her share, i.e., one-fourth of the land for which she has sued.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 670
OF 1918.

BANWARI LAL NAG AND OTHERS—
RESPONDENTS.

Consent-decree—Relief against forfeiture, principle of, applicability of—Consent-decree providing for payment of money on certain date—Time for payment, whether can be extended.

Where a consent-decree gives effect to an agreement which embodies a right to forfeiture, the Court, in the exercise of its equitable jurisdiction, is competent to grant such relief against forfeiture, as it might have granted if there had been no consent-decree and a suit had been instituted to enforce the compromise. [p. 866 col. 2]

Where a consent-decree provides for the payment of money on a prescribed date, time is not of the essence of the contract, and the Court is competent to grant an extension of time for making the payment. [p. 868 col. 2.]

Appeal from the decrees of the District Judge, Bankura, dated the 9th of January 1918, reversing the decree of the Munsif, First Court, at Bishnupur, dated the 22nd of March 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Monmothanth Mitter, for Babu Kishori Lal Chatterjee, for the Appellant.—It is true that the time for payment of the money was originally fixed by consent of parties, but the Trial Court was quite competent to extend the time and to afford relief against forfeiture. Section 148 of the Code of Civil Procedure might not in terms apply, but there is nothing to prevent the Court from acting on principles of equity. The District Judge is clearly wrong in laying down the general proposition that, where the time for performance of an agreement has been fixed by a consent order, the time cannot be enlarged except by consent. The rights and liabilities of the plaintiff and the defendant are embodied in the contract of the parties which is contained in the consent-decree. The contract is not the less a contract because there is superadded the command of the Judge. See Wentworth v. Bullen (1). The consent-order was, therefore, subject to the ordinary incidents of a contract. The agreement between the parties embodied a right to forfeiture. It was, therefore, subject to the ordinary incident of such an agreement, viz., relief against forfeiture. The fact that the agreement was evidenced by a consent-decree cannot take away the ordinary incident attached to such an agreement. The Court, in the exercise of its equitable jurisdiction, is competent to grant such relief against forfeiture as it might have granted if there had been no consent decree and a suit had been instituted to enforce the compromise. See Krishna Bai v. Hari Govind Kulkarni (2). Refer also to Nagappa v. Venkat Row (3), Lakshmanaswami Naidu v. Rangamma (4), Kumara Venkata Perumal v. Thatha Ramaswamy Ohelly (5). principle of relief against forfeiture to consent decrees is of very extensive application. See Ramgopal Mookerjee v. Masseyk (6) and Balkishen Das v. Run Bahadur Singh (7). Babu Peari Mohan Chatterjee (with him Babu Krishnalal Banerjee), for the Respondent.—A consent-decree can be varied only by consent. Section 148 of the Civil Procedure Code is of no assistance to the appellant. The appellant having entered into an agreement cannot, on his failure to perform his part of the contract, seek the assistance of the Court of Equity to grant him relief against forfeiture. He had no title to the disputed land and, therefore, no forfeiture could occur. Even if he had any, he is not entitled to any relief against forfeiture as he made several defaults. The agreement must be strictly enforced. Time was of the essence of the contract. Refers to Lachiram v. Jana Yesu Mang (12). Refers also to Harakh Singh v. Sakeb Singh (13), *Chandanbala Debi v. ## JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for recovery of possession of land upon declaration of title. The disputed property belonged to one Dina Nath Nag who left four sons, Kandarpa Nag (the plaintiff), Banwari Lal Nag (the first defendant), Pashupati Nag (the second defendant) and Sasi Bhushan Nag, since deceased. The third and fourth defendants hold a decree for money against the Nag brothers and in execution thereof purchased the property at an auction-sale held in 1911. The case for the plaintiff is that, as the ancestral homestead of the Nags was situated on the property sold, the execution-purchasers agreed, on their request, to re-convey the property to them upon payment of Rs. 250 and costs incidental to the sale, but that the first two defendants, his brothers, fraudulently took a conveyance on the 9th September 1913, in their names alone. The plaintiff accordingly prayed that his brothers might be directed to transfer to him his one-fourth share upon receipt of a proportionate amount of the purchase-money. The Nag defendants repudiated the claim as unfounded. During the pendency of the trial in the Court of first instance, the plaintiff and his brothers arrived at a settlement on the 22nd March 1916. The terms of the compromise were, that the plaintiff would get a decree declaring his title to the one-fourth share; that the plaintiff would pay to his brothers in two instalments Rs. 195 as the value of the share as also the amount of the costs of the suit; that the first instalment of Rs. 100 would be paid on the 21st April 1916; that the second instalment of Rs. 95 would be paid on the 21st May 1916, and that if payment was not made on the due dates, the defendants would become owners of the entire property. The petition of compromise was filed in Court on the same date and a preliminary decree was made thereon by consent of parties. No money, however, was paid by the plaintiff on either of the dates mentioned, but on the 22nd May 1916, he applied to the Court for extension of time, explaining that what had prevented performance of his part of the bargain, was, not his laches but the conduct of the defendants. The Court extended the time for payment till the 21st June 1916. On that date Rs. 145 was paid and an application made for a further extension of time. On the 5th July 1916, the balance due was deposited and accepted. The defendants contended that the plaintiff had forfeited his rights under the compromise and the consent decree, and that the Court had no authority to extend the time under section 148, Civil Procedure Code. The objection was overruled on the 4th August 1916, and the preliminary decree was made absolute on the 5th September 1916. Upon appeal, the District Judge has reversed that decision and has dismissed the suit on the ground that section 148, Civil Procedure Code, had no application, and that, where the time for performance has been fixed by a consent order, the time cannot be enlarged except by consent. The plaintiff has now appealed to this Court and has argued that, although section 148, Civil Procedure Code might not in terms apply, the Trial Court was competent, on principles of equity, to afford relief against forfeiture, even though the time for performance had been fixed originally by consent of parties and a consent-decree made on the basis thereof. The question raised is by no means free from difficulty, and requires careful examination.

Two principles are well-settled with regard to the nature and operation of consent-decrees. In the first place, there is high authority for the proposition that a consent-decree is just as binding on the parties thereto as a decree after a contentious trial, South American and Mexican Co., In re (16), The Belcairn (17), Jenkins v. Robertson (18), Thomson v. Moore (19), Irish Land Commission v. Ryan (20). This rule has been repeatedly recognised and applied in Indian Courts, Nicholas v. Asphar (21), Baylakshmi Dassee v. Katyayani Dassee (22), Fateh Chand v. Narsingh Das (23), Amrita Sundari v. Sherajuddin Ahamed (24), Kumara Venkata Perumal v. Thatha Ramaswamy Chetty (5), Thiruvambala Desikar v. Ohinna Pandaram (25). In the second place, it is equally well-settled that a consent-decree cannot have greater validity than the compromise itself. As was observed by the Court of Appeal in Huddersfield Banking Co. v. Lister (26), the real truth of the matter is that a consent order is a mere creature of the agreement, and if greater sanctity were attributed to it than to the original agreement itself, it would be to give the branch an existence which is independent of the tree. To use the language of Kay, L. J., the consent order is only the order of the Court carrying out the agreement between the parties. The same idea was expressed in different terms when Parke, J., said in Wentworth v. Bullen (1), that "the contract of the parties is not the less a contract and subject to the incidents of a contract, because there is superadded the command of the Judge." This statement was quoted with approval by Erle, O. J., in Livesley v. Gilmore (27), and by Chitty, J., in Conolan v. Leyland (28). The doctrine has been recognised and applied in a long series of cases in this Court; Raylakshmi Dassee v. Katyayani Dassee (22), Kahetra Moni Dasi v. Amodini Dasi (29), Keshab Panda v. Bhojani Panda (30), Umeshananda Dut Jhav. Mohendra Prasad Jhr (31), Lal Behary Mitra v. Nagendra Nath Chatterjee (32), Amrita Sundari v. Kherajuddin Ahamed (24), Galstaun v. Woomesh Chandra Bannerjee (33).

From the second of the two principles enunciated above, Jenkins, O. J., in Krishna Bai v. Hari Govind Kulkarni (2) drew the conclusion that, where the consent-decree gives effect to an agreement which embodies a right to forfeiture, the Court, in the exercise of its equitable jurisdiction, is competent to grant such relief against forfeiture as it might have granted if there had been no consent decree and a suit had been instituted to enforce the compromise. It was pointed out that as, under the Code of Civil Procedure, Order XXIII, rule 3, the decree is to be in accordance with the agreement, it cannot be deemed to have altered the relations of the parties as they existed under the agreement, and as it was an incident of those relations that the right of forfeiture was subject to relief that incident must still apply when those relations are established by a decree passed in accordance with the agreement. coincides with the view previously expressed by the Madras High Court in Nagappa v. Venkat Row (3), and Lakshmanaswami Naidu v. Rangamma (4) followed in Kumara Venkata Perumal v. Thatha Ramaswamy Chetty (5); Beaman, J., amplified the same point of view when he stated, referring to the decision in Great North West Central Railway v. Ocharlebois (34), that by private agreement converted into a decree, parties could not empower themselves to do what they could not have done by private agreement alone. This logically leads to the conclusion that the Court could not be compelled to enforce the agreement unquestioningly and literally; the decree is to be deemed, so long as it stands, as only the indisputably correct presentment of the contract, subject necessarily to the incidents of such a contract which include equitable relief against a forfeiture as not the least important and well-established. A party to a contract embodied in a consent decree cannot be held to have renounced any incidental advantages for equitable relief of which, upon the face of the contract itself as presented in the decree, he might ordinarily have claimed the benefit: Kumara Venkata Perumal v. Thatha Ramaswamy Chetty (5).

In Krishna Bai v. Hari Govind Kulkarni (2) the right to forfeiture was contained in a consent-decree whereby the status of landlord and tenant was established between the plaintiff and defendant, and the principle enunciated therein has been applied in subsequent cases between landlords and tenants, as in Balambhat Ravjibhat v. Vinayak Ganpat-rao (35), Surendra Nath Banerjee v. Secretary of State for India in Council (11), Thayyammalachi v. Rajali (36). It is plain, however, from the judgments of Jenkins, O. J., and Beaman, J., in Krishna Bai v. Hari Govind Kulkarni (2), that the principle enunciated therein was not intended to be restricted to cases where the relationship of landlord and tenant is created or recognised by the decree. An examination of the cases in the reports shows that the doctrine of the applicability of the principle of relief against forfeiture to consent-decrees is of very extensive application and has been at least twice recognised by the Judicial Committee. The principle was invoked as early as 1857 by the Sadar Dewani Adalat in the case of Ramgopal Mookerjee v. Masseyk (6), where an agreement had been made for the settlement of a litigation between A. and O. This agreement recited that C. was indebted to A. in a certain sum which O. agreed to pay, upon remission by A. of part of his claim, by two instalments at specified dates. The agreement then provided that if default was made by O. in payment of the instalments the remitted money was to be held due to A. by O. and secured upon certain property in addition to the personal liability of O. The agreement was made the foundation of the decree in the suit. Default was made in the payment of the instalments, whereupon A. brought an action against O. to recover the sum remitted. O. resisted the claim on the ground, that the default, if any, was not attributable to laches on his part but was due to accident and that, in the circumstances, he was entitled to relief against forfeiture. A Full Bench of the Sadar Dewani Adalat upheld this contention. The case was then taken on appeal to the Judicial Committee. Ram Gopal Mookerjee v. Samuel Masseyk (37). Lord Kingsdown, in an elaborate judgment reviewed the circumstances of the case and held that the conduct of the parties justified the grant of relief against forfeiture to the defendant. A similar view was adopted by the Judicial Committee in the case of Balkishen Das v. Run Bahadur Singh (7); remarks made therein show that consent-decrees were assumed to be subject to the application of the principle of relief against forfeiture although it was ultimately held that, in the events which had happened, relief should not be granted against the forfeiture incurred under the clause contained in the consent decree for the payment of sums of money in instalments. The same view was adopted by this Court in the case of Jamir Fakir v. Ram Lal Ghose Chowdhury (8) where money was payable on a specified date under a consent-decree and forfeiture was to ensue in default of punctual payment. Illustrations of the application of this principle will be found in some recent decisions of the Madras High Court. Thus, in Ana Sheikh Mohidin Thiragan v. Vadivalaigianambia Pillai (38) relief was granted against forfeiture under a consent-decree which provided that the defendant should give up possession of the land decreed to him on his failure to pay the plaintiff a sum certain on a date fixed. This was followed in the case of Bheema Venkataramana v. Bommini Gurappa (39), where also the compromise decree provided that the plaintiff should recover the property in suit unless the defendant paid into Court a certain sum of money within a certain date. To the same effect is the decision in Ramayanam Jogamma v. Enamantra Lakshmi (40), where the consent-decree in a suit by a Hindu widow for recovery of land from the reversioners of her husband provided that she should obtain possession, unless the defendants punctually paid into Court a prescribed amount as maintenance within a specified period. It was ruled that time was not of the essence of the contract, and that relief should be granted against forfeiture on the ground that the power of the Court to grant relief against the enforcement of a penal clause is not confined to contracts between landlords and tenants incorporated in a compromise decree but extends to compromise decrees generally. The substance of the matter then is that the circumstance that a consent-decree has been passed on the basis of a compromise, does not oust the jurisdiction of the Court to grant relief against forfeiture, the Court must determine whether, on equitable grounds, relief would have been granted against forfeiture if it had been called upon to enforce the agreement itself. An exhaustive enumeration of all the classes of cases where Courts of Equity have granted relief against forfeiture need not be attempted here. It is sufficient to point out that the general principle just enunciated explains and justifies the decisions in Uttam Chandra Krithy v. Khetra Nath Chatto-padhya (41), Harakh Singh v. Sahib Singh

KANDARPA NAG v. BANWARI LAL NAG.

(13), Chandanbala Debi v. Probodh Chandra Roy (14) and Snashi Bhushan Banerjee v. Oharushila Debi (9) which uniformly recognised the principle that time is of the essence of the agreement, when, in the course of proceedings by the judgment-debtor to set aside an execution sale, a compromise is made among the decree-holder, judgment-debtor and execution-purchaser that on payment of the judgment debt within a prescribed period the sale shall stand cancelled, while upon failure to make such payment the sale shall stand confirmed. In such cases, as the parties intended in the first conception of the agreement to make time the essence of the contract, the Court would not be competent to extend the time, except by consent of all the parties concerned. On the other hand, as we have seen, time has not been deemed to be of the essence of the contract when the agreement is for the payment of money on a prescribed date whether upon default of payment on that date money or land is forfeited. We are not unmindful that in Bapu v. Vilhal (42) and Lechiram v. Jana Yesu Mang (12), Scott, O. J., who had been a party to the decision in Balambhat Rajibhat v. Vinayak Ganpatrao (35) strictly applied the dictum of North, J., in Australasian Automatic Weighing Machine Co. v. Walter (43) that a consent-decree can only be varied by consent, expressed himself in favour of restriction of the rule to cases of landlords and tenants and declined to treat it as applicable to cases of vendors and purchasers. In this connection, it must be remembered that the judgment of Scott, O. J., in Burjorji Dhunjibhai v. Jamsheer Khodaram Irani (44) where he had held that time was of the essence of the contract in agreements for the sale of land had not yet been reversed by the Judicial Committee; Jamsheer Khodaram Irani v. Burjorji Dhunjibhai (45). It is, however, well-settled now by the decision of the Judicial Committee that in cases of specific performance of contracts to sell real estate, equity which governs the rights of the parties looks, not at the letter but at the substance of the agreement, in order to ascertain whether the parties, notwithstanding that they named a specific time within which completion was to take place, really and in substance intended more than that it should take place within a reasonable time. This accords with the doctrine formulated by Lord Cairns in Tilley v. Thomas (46) and by Lord Atkinson and Lord Parker in Stickney v. Keeble (47). See also Dagenham (Thames) Dock Co., In re (48), Mahadeo Frosad v. Narain Chandra (10). We may add that we are not concerned here with the question of the right of a Court to grant relief against forfeiture under a decree which is not by consent as in Sajjadi Begam v. Dilwar Husain (15) or under a decree made in accordance with statutory provisions which reserves power to the Court to grant an extension of time; Both Narain v. Mahomed Moosa (49), Akkach Mondal v. Aminuddi Mullik (50). We hold accordingly, first, that in the case before us the jurisdiction of the Trial Court to grant relief against forfeiture was not ousted by the circumstance that the agreement had been followed by a consent-decree and, secondly, that the nature of the agreement was such as entitled the Court to grant relief against forfeiture on equitable grounds. The view taken by the District Judge that as the agreement had crystalized into a decree the Trial Court was deprived of its power to grant relief cannot be supported. It has not been argued here that if the authority of the Trial Court to grant relief against forfeiture were deemed established, its decision could be successfully challenged on the ground that the exercise of its discretion had been so manifestly erroneous as to justify interference of a Court of Appeal, and plainly the question cannot be usefully discussed from that point of view in a Court of second appeal which cannot investigate the facts.

The result is, that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored. There will be no order for costs either here or before the District Judge.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 77—Suit for compulsory registration—Court, duty of.

In a suit brought for the compulsory registration of a sale-deed all that a Civil Court has to consider is the genuineness of the deed and not its validity.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 1st June 1917.

Mr. P. L. Bineri, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. N. Sanyal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought for the compulsory registration of a sale-deed which was said to be executed by one Harjas on the 2nd of January 1916. The first Court decreed the suit. On appeal however, the learned District Judge held that Harjas did not execute the sale-deed of his own free-will and he allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit. There was no clear finding in his judgment as to whether, as a matter of fact, Harjas had or had not executed the sale deed. We referred this case to the Court below and the finding has been returned to the effect that Harjas did execute the sale deed. No objection has been taken to this finding. It seems to us that all that the Civil Court has to consider is the

Rao Sahib R. V. MAHAJANI—RESPONDENT.
Berar Electoral Rules, rr. 10 (2), 27, 28, 29 (1), Regulation II, cl. (ii)—Election petition—Governor, power of, to dismiss petition—Election, scheme of—Acts required to be done by proposer or seconder, whether can be delegated—Certificate—Single certificate, whether contemplated—Certificate obtained by candidate, effect of—Election Agent, declaration of, whether should bear stamp—Declaration written on stamp paper and signature attested by Magistrate, effect of—Government of India Act, 1912, Council constituted under, member of, eligibility of, for election to Council constituted by Government of India Act, 1919.

Under rule 29 (1) of the Berar Electoral Rules, the Governor of the Province has power to dismiss an election petition in those cases only in which the required security for costs is not deposited in accordance with the provisions of rule 28. The figure 27 in rule 29 (1) is a misprint for 28. [p. 87, col. 2.]

The principle of the whole scheme of Elections under the Berar Electoral Rules is, that what is required to be done by the proposer, or by the seconder, or by the candidate, or by an elector, cannot be permitted to be done by his agent, unless there is clear authority for it. Where, therefore, the rules require the nomination paper of a candidate to be transmitted to the Returning Officer by the proposer and seconder, its transmission by the candidate is not a proper transmission and renders the nomination invalid. [p. 876, col. 1.]

The certification of the facts required by clause (ii) of Regulation II of the Berar Electoral Rules, need not necessarily be by means of only a single certificate. The certification of those facts by means of two or more certificates given by different officers would not render a nomination paper invalid. But where the certificate required to be appended to the nomination paper is obtained and appended by the candidate, instead of by the proposer and seconder, the nomination is invalid. [p. 876, cols. 1 & 2.]

The declaration of an Election Agent made by a candidate does not require to be stamped to render it valid. The mere fact that such a declaration is written on a stamp-paper, and the signature of the candidate is attested by a Sub-Divisional Magistrate, would not alter the nature of the document, and make it an invalid declaration. [p. 877, col. 1.]

The fact that a candidate is, at the time of his nomination, a member of a Legislative Council constituted under the Government of India Act, 1912, does not disqualify him from seeking election to a Legislative Council constituted by the Government of India Act, 1919. [p. 877, col. 2.]

The mere fact that a nomination paper is posted by a peon under the directions of the seconder, does not render the nomination invalid. [p. 878, col. 1.]

Mr. A. S. Athale, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. G. Damle, R. B., for Respondent No. 1.

Mr. V. K. Rawade, for Respondent No. 2.

REPORT.—For the one seat allotted to the West Berar Non-Muhammadan Urban Constituency of the Central Provinces Legislative Council, there were two candidates, (1) Rao Sahib R. V. Mahajani, respondent No. 1, and (2) Mr. A. V. Khare, Respondent No. 2. The petitioner, Mr. S. W. Kelkar, had proposed Mr. Khare as a candidate and Mr. S. D. Cama, a Pleader of Akola, who is not a party to these proceedings, was the seconder. The nomination papers of the two candidates were sent through post to the Commissioner, Berar, who was the Returning Officer for the Constituency. That officer on scrutinizing Mr. Khare's nomination paper was of opinion that it was on certain grounds invalid and he, therefore, rejected it. He found Rao Sahib Mahajani's nomination paper to be in order and there being thus only one candidate left for the seat, the Returning Officer declared the respondent No. 1 as being duly elected.

2. The petitioner then presented this petition under rule 25 of the Berar Electoral Rules to the Hon'ble the Chief Commissioner—now His Excellency the Governor—who appointed us Commissioners under rule 29 (2) for its trial. To the petition there was originally only one respondent cited, and he was Rao Sahib Mahajani. Mr. Khare was, on his own application, subsequently joined as a co respondent to these proceedings before us.

SADASHOO WAMAN KELKAR v. R. V. MAHAJANI.

3. The petitioner urged that Mr. Khare's nomination paper was perfectly valid and was wrongly rejected by the Returning Officer. He attacked the election of the respondent No. 1 on the grounds that he was not under the rules eligible for election and that his nomination paper was not in order. He, therefore, prayed that the election of the respondent No. 1 should be declared void and that the respondent No. 2 should be declared as duly elected.

4. At the outset, a preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the respondent No. 1 that the election petition was not in order and was liable to be dismissed by the Governor. The ground urged was that the petitioner should have originally joined Mr. Khare as a respondent to the petition as required by rule 27. The learned Pleader for the respondent No. 1, therefore, requested us that the point be referred to the Governor for His Excellency's orders and to keep the enquiry into the petition pending till the final orders were received. On that preliminary objection we framed the following issues:—

- (a) Is the election petition liable to be dismissed because Mr. A. V. Khare was not originally joined to it as a respondent?
- (b) If it was so liable to be dismissed, should the petition be sent back to the Governor for His Excellency's orders?
- (c) Should the present petition be kept pending till the receipt of those orders?

5. We were of opinion that there was no force in the objection and that it was quite unnecessary to return the election petition to the Governor and to keep the present proceedings pending. In order to understand our reasons for overruling the objection, a reference to the rules cited for the respondent No. 1 in his support is necessary. These are rules Nos. 27, 28 and 29 (1) of the Berar Electoral Rules, as published in the Central Provinces Extraordinary Gazette of the 5th August 1920. Rule No. 27 lays down that the petitioner, if he claims a declaration that a certain candidate has been elected, shall join as respondents all other candidates who were nominated at the election. Rule 28 requires a deposit of security for costs by the petitioner. Rule 29 (1) runs as follows:—

"If the provisions of the rule 27 are not complied with, the Governor shall dismiss the petition."

It was thus contended for the respondent No. 1 that, as the petitioner in his petition claimed that Mr. Khare had been duly elected, he was under rule 27 bound to join him as a respondent and his not having done so, the petition was liable to be dismissed.

6. To us, it appears that the figure 27 mentioned in rule 29 (1) was a misprint for 28. This will be apparent, if we compare these rules with their corresponding draft rules published in the Central Provinces Gazette of July 10th last, and also with the corresponding rules for the Central Provinces. The Central Provinces Rules corresponding to 27, 28 and 29 are respectively 32, 33 and 34. The wording of these rules is identical. Under rule 34 (1) of the Central Provinces Rules, the election petition is liable for dismissal, only if the provisions of rule 33 are not complied with. In rule 34 (1) no mention whatsoever is made of rule 32.

Similarly, in the draft rules the corresponding numbers were 26, 27 and 28. In rule 23 (1) of the draft rules, mention is made of rule 27 and not of 26. It, therefore, appears that, when the rules were finally passed, they were re-numbered as 27, 28 and 29 and that through inadvertence the original figure of 27 appearing in the last rule was left uncorrected.

This will show that the Governor has been given power to dismiss an election petition only in case the required security for costs is not deposited. The petition is thus not liable to be dismissed for the non-joinder of any party.

7. Even assuming that the figure 27, as given in rule 29 (1), is not a misprint for 28, and even assuming that the petition was liable to be dismissed by the Governor, the Commissioners had no power to return it. They could not go behind their own appointment and refer back the petition to the Governor, on the ground that it was not in proper form and was, therefore, liable to be dismissed. Moreover, there is a distinct statement by the Governor in the order appointing the present Commission that the petition had fully complied with the rules in this behalf. On these grounds we overruled the preliminary objection and proceeded with the hearing of the election petition.

8. In order to understand the grounds on which the validity of Mr. Khare's nomination paper is questioned, it is necessary to state how it was prepared and how it was sent to the Returning Officer. The proposer, the seconder and the candidate all three appeared before the District Judge on 21st October 1920, and made their signatures on it in his presence. They requested the District Judge to endorse on the nomination paper a certificate that they had signed it in his presence and that they were electors in the Constituency, as required by Regulation II (ii) under rule 12. The District Judge made an endorsement on the nomination paper to the effect that the proposer, the seconder and the candidate had signed it in his presence, but as regards the second part of the certificate he told them that he could not give it, as the final Electoral Rolls for the Constituency were not in his office. Mr. Khare then took the nomination paper to the Deputy Commissioner, who endorsed on it a certificate that the candidate, the proposer and the seconder were electors in the Constituency. This nomination paper remained with Mr. Khare and he sent it on through post to the Returning Officer with a covering letter from him on 23rd October 1920. It was also accompanied by a declaration appointing himself as the Election Agent. That declaration was on a plain paper and was not stamped. In the covering letter Mr. Khare wrote to the Returning Officer that, according to his view, the declaration did not require any stamp, but that if it did require any, an intimation might be sent to him so as to enable him to supply it.

9. It is contended for the respondent No. 1 that Mr. Khare's nomination paper was invalid on the following grounds:—

- (1) That it was sent by Mr. Khare himself, while it should have been sent by the proposer and the seconder.
- (2) That there should have been one certificate from one officer, while in the present case there were two certificates endorsed on the nomination paper from two different officers,

(3) That the certificate should have been obtained and appended by the proposer and the seconder, while in the present case the second certificate was obtained by the candidate himself.

(4) That the declaration of Election Agent made by Mr. Khare required to be on a stamp paper.

10. In answer to these objections, it was urged for the petitioner and the respondent No. 2 that the nomination paper in question was properly prepared; that the certificates endorsed on it were properly obtained; that it was properly sent to the Returning Officer through post, and that nothing that was done in any way offended the wording or the spirit of the rules on the subject. It was further alleged that Mr. Khare was authorised by both the proposer and the seconder to obtain the second certificate, to do all things necessary for the completion of the nomination paper and to send it by post to the Returning Officer. According to them the declaration did not require any stamp.

11. The following points were fixed by us for determination:—

(1) Were the two certificates on the nomination paper of Mr. Khare obtained under the circumstances alleged by the petitioner?

(2) Are the two certificates valid under the Regulation II (ii), made under rule 12?

(3) (a) Was the nomination paper of Mr. Khare sent through post by him at the instance and under instructions of the petitioner or the seconder or both as alleged?

(b) If so, was such sending by Mr. Khare valid and sufficient?

(4) What is the requirement of the Regulation II with regard to the sending of the nomination paper by post?

(5) Did the declaration of Election Agent by Mr. Khare require to be on a stamp-paper, and if so, is the nomination paper rendered void for want of it? Is this declaration of appointment of Election Agent also void, because of its not mentioning the Constituency?

SADASHO WAMAN KELKAR v. R. V. MAHAJANI.

- (6) Is the nomination paper of Mr. Khare, if otherwise valid, rendered void by reason of his sending a letter along with it?
- (7) Are the defects in the nomination paper of Mr. Khare trivial and such as will not vitiate his nomination?
- (8) (a) Is the document filed by Rao Sahab Mahajani a declaration of appointment of an Election Agent as required by rule 10 (2)?
- (b) Is the declaration of appointment of Election Agent by Rao Sahab Mahajani invalid for reasons given by the petitioner?
- (9) Does the fact of Rao Sahab Mahajani being a member of the existing Central Provinces Legislative Council render his nomination and election void?
- (10) Is the nomination paper of Rao Sahab Mahajani bad for reasons alleged by the petitioner and respondent, Mr. A. V. Khare?
- (11) Who should bear the costs of this election petition and to what extent?

12. The circumstances under which Mr. Khare's nomination paper was prepared and sent to the Returning Officer have already been narrated. As regards the petitioner's allegations that Mr. Khare was authorised by the proposer and the seconder to get the second certificate from the Deputy Commissioner, to do all that was necessary for completing the nomination paper and to send it by post on their behalf to the Returning Officer, we have the affidavits of the petitioner and the respondent No. 2. No counter affidavit has been filed by the respondent No. 1. It must, therefore, for the purposes of these proceedings, be taken that both Mr. Cama and Mr. Kelkar had asked Mr. Khare to go to the Deputy Commissioner's office for obtaining the second certificate from him on their behalf. Mr. Cama had asked Mr. Khare to do all that was necessary for the completion of the nomination form. Both Mr. Cama and Mr. Kelkar were engaged in other work and so they asked Mr. Khare to do the needful. On 23rd October 1920 Mr. Kelkar had got to go to Basim and he went to Mr. Khare's house and instructed him to send the nomination paper for him by ordinary post. These facts have been substantiated by the affidavits. This disposes of Issues Nos. 1 and 3 (a).

13. Before discussing the questions as regards the interpretation of the rules, it seems necessary to refer to the rules bearing on the subject. Regulations under rule 12 of the Berar Electoral Rules are published in the Central Provinces Gazette for July 31st last. Regulation I describes how nomination of any candidate is to be made. Nomination is to be made by means of a nomination paper, which is to be subscribed by two electors in the Constituency as proposer and seconder, the candidate himself signing it in token of his having assented to his nomination. Regulation II is more important and we think it necessary to quote it in extenso.

"2 (i) Save as provided in clause (ii)

Presentation of every nomination paper shall be presented to the Returning Officer at his head-quarters office by the proposer and seconder after the re-publication of the roll and before the date appointed by Government for the scrutiny of nomination papers. Provided that the candidate has signed the nomination paper in token of assent, he need not attend before the Returning Officer.

(ii) A candidate may be nominated by a nomination paper sent by post so as to reach the Returning Officer before the expiry of the period aforesaid. The proposer and seconder shall append to such nomination paper a certificate from a gazetted, revenue or judicial officer, that they have signed the paper in his presence and that they are electors in the Constituency."

14. It was very earnestly represented to us on behalf of the petitioner that the election rules should be interpreted liberally and that a natural and common-sense interpretation should be put upon them, especially in view of the fact that the new Reformed Councils affected a large number of electors, a very large majority of whom were not at all experienced in these matters. The object of the new Government of India Act was to considerably extend the franchise and to include in it as many electors as possible. In the old Councils there was always a very large proportion of lawyers and one of the foremost objects of the new Reform Scheme was "to ensure that men of other classes and occupations found a sufficient number of seats in the new Councils."* It was, therefore, urged that the framers of the rules could never have expected a strict, tight and literal compliance with them, and that all what they wanted was a common sense and reasonable compliance with their spirit, as the rules had to be interpreted and followed by ordinary common villagers. There is undoubtedly a very considerable force in this argument and we are in general agreement with it. At the same time, we cannot condone or overlook any direct breach of or non-compliance with an express rule, the effect of which would be to substantially offend the wording and the spirit thereof. This would be beyond our power to do. When the words are perfectly clear, the ordinary rule for the interpretation of Statutes is to take them in their simple and literal sense.

15. At this stage, it must be made clear that the right to vote and to elect is a personal and individual right and all idea of agency in connection therewith must be excluded, unless otherwise expressly permitted. The right is not capable of being transferred or exercised through agents. The general principle, that whatever one is entitled or required to do can be done by his duly appointed agent, has, therefore, no application to the exercise of the right conferred by the Government of India Act. "An agent may be appointed for the purpose of executing any deed, or making any contract, or doing any other act on behalf of the principal, which the principal might himself execute, make, or do; except for the purpose of exercising a power or authority conferred, or of performing a duty imposed, on the principal personally, the exercise or performance of which involves discretion or skill, or for the purpose of doing an act which the principal is required, by or pursuant to any Statute, to do in his own proper person."† The exercise of the right to vote and to elect or to stand as a candidate is a personal and individual right and it cannot be delegated.

What is required under the rules to be done by the proposer, or by the seconder, or by the candidate, or by an elector cannot be permitted to be done by his agent, unless there is a clear authority for it. This we consider as being the principle of the whole scheme of elections.

Regulation II (1) prescribes that the nomination paper should be presented to the Returning Officer by the proposer and the seconder and we do not think that it could ever have been the intention of the framers that this duty could be done through agents. Though the words "in person" or "themselves" are not to be found in the Regulation, it could not be said that the proposer and the seconder could employ an agent and could do the presentation through him. As an elector cannot give his vote through an agent, except in certain specified cases in which it is expressly permitted, the nomination paper has to be transmitted to the Returning Officer personally by the proposer and seconder. If they cannot personally go, permission is given to them to send it to the Returning Officer through post on the observance of a certain procedure.

16. In paragraph 13 above, we have quoted at full length Regulation II bearing on the subject. It consists of two clauses (i) and (ii); the first sentence of the second clause is in the passive form and is silent as to by whom the nomination paper is to be sent. It is, therefore, contended for the petitioner that the nomination paper could be sent by the candidate himself and that it was not necessary for its validity that it should be sent only by the proposer and the seconder. According to the petitioner's learned Pleader, the absence of the subject in the first sentence was to indicate that the nomination paper could be sent even by a total stranger. In this connection, we have to read both the clauses together. The two clauses constitute one rule of procedure, the second clause being merely proviso to the first. The principal and the primary mode by which the nomination paper was to be prepared and transmitted to the Returning Officer, is prescribed by the first clause, an exception to it being given in the second. The second clause merely gives an exception and permits a departure in procedure from that laid down in clause (i), inasmuch as it permits the sending of the nomination paper through post. The two clauses are to be read together, and on reading them we come to the conclusion that the duty of transmitting the nomination paper to the Returning Officer has been cast upon the proposer and the seconder. They are to either personally present it to the Returning Officer at his head quarters or to send it through post. The very second sentence in sub-clause (ii) would show that the whole work in connection with the nomination paper and in connection with its transmission to the Returning Officer was to be done by the proposer and the seconder, and that a candidate was to have no hand in it, except to give his assent by signing the nomination paper.

*Report on Indian Constitutional Reforms, page 55.

SADASHIBO WAMAN KELKAR V. R. V. MAHAJANI.

17. Our attention has been drawn to the rule framed for certain other provinces, which permit the presentation of the nomination paper by the candidate himself and we are therefore, asked to hold that the taking of a part by the candidate in his own nomination could not have been objected to by the framers of the Central Provinces and Berar Regulations. It has to be mentioned that Regulations differ province by province and those of other provinces cannot, therefore, guide us in the interpretation of our own, when these are clear. It is worth mentioning that in the Punjab, it is not necessary that the person who delivers the nomination paper should be either the candidate or his proposer or seconder, and that it could be delivered even by a mere stranger. Different circumstances prevail in different provinces and that probably accounts for the necessity of prescribing different procedure for them. When a nomination paper has to be delivered by the candidate or by his proposer or seconder, its presentation by a stranger is invalid. See Monks v. Jackson.* Because in the Punjab the delivery of a nomination paper by a stranger is not considered objectionable, it would not follow that its presentation by a stranger in the Central Provinces or in Berar should be considered as valid. Similarly, because in certain other provinces the presentation of a nomination paper is permitted to be made by the candidate, it does not follow that it could be made by the candidate in our province, when our rules do not permit this to be done. It is not possible for us to say why in Berar and in the Central Provinces the presentation of a nomination paper to the Returning Officer was required to be made by the proposer and the seconder, and why it was not permitted to be made by the candidate himself, as in Bihar and Orissa, or by a stranger, as in the Punjab. But if we could hazard a guess, the object of the framers of the Regulations for the Central Provinces and Berar appears to have been to keep the whole thing in connection with the nomination in the hands of the proposer and the seconder, uninfluenced by the candidate, who was to remain in the background. The object was apparently to give a free choice to the proposer and the seconder and to give them the liberty of changing their minds even at the last moment.

18. In the present case the nomination paper was, as a matter of fact, sent by Mr. Khare. It is no doubt, true that he was directed by the proposer and the seconder to send it but, as we have already observed, the duty could not be delegated. It was not a mere mechanical act which was done by Mr. Khare. A separate letter from himself was sent along with the nomination paper and its wording would show that he was the real sender. In that letter no mention whatsoever was made that Mr. Khare was forwarding the nomination paper on behalf of the proposer and the seconder, or that he was acting as their agent and on their behalf. He purported to send the nomination paper for himself. The intelligent part of sending the nomination paper was done by him. It seems necessary to point out that there is a great difference in the meanings of the expression "sending" and of "despatching" or "posting." Despatching and posting in the post-box is a mechanical act which should not be confounded with the act of sending. The mechanical act can be done by anybody, even by a servant. The sending of a letter is an intelligent act and it has to be performed by the proposer and the seconder. An illiterate person may get a letter written for him by another but he will be the sender, and the letter, though that letter may be taken to the Post Office by a third person and the address on the envelope may be written by a stranger. In the present case Mr. Khare who sent the nomination tion paper in his own name with a covering letter from himself. He was thus the actual sender. This intelligent act of sending which is entirely different from the act of despatching or posting in the post-box could not be delegated by the proposer and the seconder. They had got to do it personally and in our opinion, therefore, the nomination paper was not in this case properly sent and was, therefore, invalid. This settles Issue Nos. 3 (b), 4 and 6.

19. As already stated, there were two certificates separately endorsed on Mr. Khare's nomination paper by two different officers. It was urged for the respondent No. 1 that this was not in conformity with the requirements of clause (ii) of Regulation II, and that it required one certificate certifying both the facts and signed by one officer. We were asked to interpret the second sentence of clause (ii) by putting upon it a strictly grammatical construction, and in this connection there was a very interesting argument addressed to us. According to one side, the sentence was a complex one, while, on the other, it was urged that it was compound. In our opinion, it is unnecessary to go into the grammatical construction of the sentence as the meaning is plain enough. All what the rule requires, is the certification of certain facts by an officer of a certain status. It is immaterial whether those facts are certified by means of one certificate from one officer or by two or more certificates given by different officers. It is a well known rule of interpretation that words in the singular include the plural and vice versa, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context.* By the mere fact that, before the word "certificate" the article "a" is put in it does not follow that one certificate was intended and that the plurality thereof was meant to be excluded. There is nothing in the Regulation indicating the necessity or importance of only one certificate. Our opinion, therefore, is that Mr. Khare's nomination paper was not invalid, merely on the ground that there were two certificates endorsed on it instead of one. The requirements of the certificate were substantially complied with, except in one particular which shall be presently mentioned.

*C. P. General Clauses Act I of 1914, section 12.

20. The rule requires that the certificate is to be appended by the proposer and the seconder. In the present case, the second certificate was obtained by Mr. Khare. It was, therefore, he, who must be considered to have appended it. The fact that the certificate was endorsed on the back of the nomination paper itself and was not separately attached to it does not make any difference. The Regulation required that the certificate was to be appended by the proposer and the seconder and this duty could not be delegated. The candidate could not undertake this duty on their behalf. Neither the proposer nor the seconder was present at the time the second certificate was obtained by Mr. Khare. Our opinion, therefore, is that the second certificate was not obtained or appended as required by the Regulation and thus the nomination paper was invalid. This settles Issue No. 2.

21. The defects pointed out above were not trivial or insignificant, and they did not amount to a mere irregularity. When a certain procedure is laid down it must be presumed that it was meant to be followed and that its non-observance would make the proceeding inoperative and invalid. The procedure prescribed in this case was substantially disregarded, making Mr. Khare's nomination invalid. This is as regards Issue No. 7.

22. It was contended that the declaration of the Election Agent made by Mr. Khare required to be on a one-rupee stamp, Article 4, Schedule I of the Stamp Act being quoted in support thereof. The Article runs as follows:—

"AFFIDAVIT.—Including an affirmation or declaration in the case of persons by law allowed to affirm or declare instead of swearing.—One rupee."

The declaration required by rule 10 (2) of the Berar Electoral Rules cannot be classed as an affidavit. It is not required to be made before a Magistrate or a Judge or an officer having power to administer an oath or affirmation. The Article of the Stamp Act, in our opinion, presupposes that the affidavit or declaration has to be made before a person having an authority to administer an oath or to call upon a deponent to make a declaration.

The declaration under rule 10 (2) cannot also be considered as a power-of-attorney. In our opinion, therefore, the declaration of an Election Agent made by Mr. Khare did not require any stamp. It was also not bad, because it did not specifically mention the Constituency. The nomination paper, along with which it was sent, would show that it was in respect of his candidature for the West Berar Non-Muhammadan Urban Constituency. This disposes of the Issue No. 5.

23. Next, we come to the election of the respondent No. 1, Rao Sahab Mahajani. His declaration of the Election Agent was written on one rupee general stamp and his signature was attested by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate Akola. These facts, according to the learned Pleader for the respondent No. 2, made the declaration a general power-of-attorney and it was, therefore, invalid. We must frankly confess that we were unable to follow the reasoning of the learned Pleader. The mere fact of the declaration having been written on a stamp-paper and the mere fact that the executant made his signature in the presence of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate could not alter its nature. Perhaps, Rao Sahab Mahajani was too careful and did not want to take any risks and, therefore, followed all this lengthy and unnecessary procedure. The wording of the document will, however, clearly show that this document was meant to be a declaration under rule 10 (2) of the Berar Electoral Rules. It has been expressly so stated in the document itself. The fact that the seal of the Court was affixed before the respondent No. 1 made his signature, would not affect its validity, even if it were true. We have, however, the affidavit of Rao Sahab Mahajani to the effect that he put his signature after the whole body of the document was written. The stamp-paper and the Magistrate's attestation may be considered as mere superfluities and these would not alter the nature of the document. The answer to the question put in Issue No. 8 (a) must, therefore, be in the affirmative and that in 8 (b) in the negative.

24. At the time the respondent Rao Sahab Mahajani was nominated and stood as a candidate for the new Council he was a member of the Central Provinces

Legislative Council then existing. It was, therefore, contended that, under rule 4 (6), he was not eligible for election. Under that rule a person who is already a member of a Legislative body constituted under the Act is not eligible for election under the rules. The expression 'the Act' means the Government of India Act, see rule 2 (1) (a). The principal Act of 1915, amended by any Act for the time being in force, is cited as the Government of India Act, see section 47 of the Government of India Act, 1919. The Central Provinces Legislative Council, of which the respondent Rao Sahab Mahajani was a member, was constituted under the Government of India Act of 1912 and was not constituted under the Government of India Act of 1915, as amended by the Act of 1916, and further amended by that of 1919. It could not have been the intention of the framers of the rules to exclude members of the already existing Councils. If we were to accept the interpretation sought to be put upon the rule by the petitioner, we would have to suppose that the Government of India or the Houses of Parliament intended to exclude from the new Councils the members of the existing Councils unless they were prepared to resign their seats on them. This could not have been the intention and such an important body of public men could never have been intended to be excluded. What we mean to say is, that the Council which has been substituted by the new Council and of which Rao Sahab Mahajani was a member was constituted by the Government of India Act, 1912, and not by the Government of India Act, 1915, as amended by the Acts of 1916 and 1919. The membership of the present Council is not a bar to candidature to the new Council. The existing Council was not, in our opinion, a Council within the meaning of the amended Government of India Act and the rules made thereunder. In our opinion, therefore, Rao Sahab Mahajani was not ineligible on account of the mere fact of his being a member of the Central Provinces Legislative Council existing on 23rd October 1920. This disposes of Issue No. 9.

25. The nomination paper of Rao Sahab Mahajani was attacked by the petitioner and the respondent No. 2 on the same grounds.

RAJJAB SHAH v. TAHIR SHAH.

on which Mr. Khare's nomination paper was attacked by him. The nomination paper of Rao Saheb Mahajani was prepared and signed by both the proposer and the seconder. A covering letter addressed to the Returning Officer signed by the proposer and the seconder was attached to the nomination paper. The nomination paper and the covering letter were then put in a cover, the address on which was written by one Mr. Dharnadikari under their orders. The packet was actually posted by a peon under the seconder's directions. The covering letter would show that it was the proposer and the seconder who were the actual senders of the nomination paper and the mere fact that the address on the cover was written and the packet was posted in the post-box by others would not make the nomination paper invalid. The intelligent act of the sending was that of the proposer and the seconder, and others, including the candidate, had no hand in it. The 10th issue is thus answered in the negative.

26. Our conclusions, therefore, are,—

- (1) The nomination of the respondent No. 2, Mr. A. V. Khare, was not valid;
- (2) The nomination and election of the respondent No. 1, Rao Saheb R. V. Mahajani, was valid, and
- (3) The petition is liable to be dismissed.

We recommend that the costs of the respondent No. 1 should be paid by the petitioner, his own costs and those of the respondent No. 2 being borne by themselves. We assess Pleaders' fees at Rs 250.

27. Before concluding, we have to express our thanks to the learned Pleaders who appeared for the parties for the very able manner in which they argued their respective cases. Their arguments were of considerable help to us.

Partition of fractional share of estate—Estate not capable of partition—Decree, proper.

Where in a suit for possession, by partition, of a fractional share of an estate, the Courts are unable, owing to the impartible nature of the estate, to separate by metes and bounds the plaintiff's share from the rest, the proper course is not to dismiss the suit, but to give the plaintiff a decree for joint possession over such share as is found lawfully to belong to him. Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 7th of March 1918.

Mr. N. P. Upadhyaya, for the Appellants.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The essential point for determination in these two connected second appeals is a simple one, and seems to us almost too clear for argument. The plaintiffs came into Court alleging in substance that they were entitled to a fractional share in certain property by reason of inheritance from one Pir or Pira Shah. They alleged that the defendants had wholly dispossessed them were denying their title and keeping the entire profits of the property to themselves. They asked for possession by partition, that is to say, to have the fractional share, to which they claimed title, separated from the rest by metes and bounds and handed over to them. The defence set up raised a number of issues all of which were tried out by the Court of first instance. On many questions of fact, the findings of that Court were in favour of the plaintiffs, but on two points the decision went against them. The Court held that the property in suit was not susceptible of division by metes and bounds. It held, further, that the suit was barred by the twelve years rule of limitation. On appeal by the plaintiffs the lower Appellate Court held that the suit was within time, but still dismissed the entire suit upon a finding that the property was not susceptible of partition and that the plaintiffs, having sought no other relief, could obtain no other. It is clear that, in argument at any rate, the point was taken on behalf of the plaintiffs that they might in the alternative be given relief by way of a decree declaring their title, but the lower Appellate Court overruled this contention, virtually on the ground that to grant it would change the entire nature of the suit. The plaintiffs filed this appeal against the decision of the lower Appellate Court, but also instituted another suit out of which Second Appeal No. 22 of 1919 has arisen. In this suit they asked for a mere declaration of their title; but the question of law involved has now been differently decided in the Courts below, and this second suit has been dismissed on the ground that relief by way of declaration, not only might have been sought in the former suit, but necessarily should have been claimed in the alternative. It is obviously unjust to the plaintiffs that both these decisions should stand, and, as a matter of fact, we think the decision of the Courts below in the first suit was clearly wrong. Even before the passing of the present Code of Civil Procedure, Act No. V of 1908, it was held that upon a suit for actual possession the plaintiff might, in the discretion of the Court, obtain a decree for a declaration of title, if for any reason the Court found it impossible to grant relief by way of actual delivery of possession. As authority for this it is sufficient to cite the case of Govind Rao v. Sita Ram Kesho (1). Under the present Code, however, provision has been made in Order XXI, rule 35, clause (2), for the execution of a decree for delivery of joint possession over immoveable property, an amendment of the law which clears up certain difficulties which had previously been felt by the Courts. If, therefore, the only difficulty in the way of the plaintiffs in the first suit was the impartible nature of the property, it seems obvious that the Courts, finding themselves unable to separate by metes and bounds the plaintiffs' share from the rest, should have granted as much of the plaintiffs' prayer as they could and given the plaintiffs a decree for joint possession over such share as they found lawfully to belong to them. There has been some argument before us about the decision of the Courts below regarding one particular item of property, in respect of which the suit seems to have been dismissed upon a different finding which is clearly a finding against the plaintiffs on the question of title. It looks like a finding of fact; but it is not necessary for us to go further into the matter, because, in our opinion, the case will have to go back to the lower Court for decision on the merits. The suit has been dismissed in that Court upon the finding that the plaintiffs, by reason of the nature of the relief sought in their plaint, must either get a decree for partition by metes and bounds or no decree at all. We reverse that finding, holding that the plaintiffs, if their title is established, should receive a decree for joint possession over such fractional share in the property in suit as the Court finds to be their rightful due. The case must now go back to the lower Appellate Court in order that the defendants-respondents may have an opportunity, if they wish to do so, of supporting the decree of the Court of first instance on any of the points which have been decided in favour of the plaintiffs. In fact, the lower Appellate Court will have to try the suit on the merits, unless the defendants now withdraw any of the pleas upon which issues were framed in the Court of first instance. Our order, therefore, on Second Appeal No. 711 of 1918 is that we set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case to that Court, with orders to re-admit the same on to its file of pending appeals and to dispose of it on the merits. We think that the plaintiffs are clearly entitled to their costs of this appeal and we order accordingly.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 183—Mortgage—Order absolute for sale—Application to enforce order—Limitation.

An application to enforce an order absolute for sale made by the High Court in a suit for the enforcement of a mortgage-security must be made within 12 years from the date when the present right to enforce the order accrues; that is to say, the date when the order absolute for sale was made.

Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Rankin.

Mr. H. D. Bose, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This appeal raises the question, whether an application by the appellant to enforce a judgment of this Court, made in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction, is or is not barred by limitation. The suit was instituted for the enforcement of a mortgage-security. On the 30th June 1904, the usual preliminary decree under section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act was made. On the 26th January 1905, the Registrar submitted a report on the accounts, and the 18th August 1905 was fixed for re-payment. But the amount was not paid, and on the 22nd March 1907 an order absolute was made in accordance with the provisions of section 89. It was, however, not till the 18th May 1919 that the representative of the decree holder (who had died in the meantime) applied to the Court to enforce his rights and realise his dues under the judgment. Mr. Justice Rankin has held that the application is barred by limitation.

Article 183 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act provides that an application to enforce a judgment, decree or order of any Court established by Royal Charter, in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction, must be made within 12 years from the date when a present right to enforce the judgment, decree or order accrues to some person capable of realising the right. There is a proviso to the Article which lays down that the period of 12 years shall be computed from the date of payment, acknowledgment or revivor where there has been such payment, acknowledgment or revivor. It is not disputed that the facts of the present case do not bring it within the proviso. Consequently, the question is, has the application been made within 12 years from the date when a present right to enforce the judgment or decree or order accrued to some person capable of realising the right. Such right, in our opinion, accrued to the decree-holder when the order absolute for sale was made on the 22nd March 1907. It has been finally suggested on behalf of the appellant that the right could not accrue till the order had been filed; but no attempt has been made to support this contention by reference to principle or authorities. The reason is obvious; if the contention of the appellant were to prevail, the result would follow that the period of limitation might be indefinitely extended by reason of the laches of the decree-holder, who might not, as has happened in the case before us, file the decree for years. We may add that no attempt has been made in this Court to reiterate the desperate argument advanced before Mr. Justice Rankin and rightly overruled by him, that no rule of limitation applies to this matter. In our opinion, the application has been properly dismissed as barred by limitation and this appeal must be dismissed, with separate costs to the two sets of respondents.

FLETCHER, J.—I agree.

M held a decree against L and in execution thereof applied for the attachment of any debt due by P to L, this attachment was made under Order XXI rule 46 of the Civil Procedure Code, and an order was passed directing P to pay a certain sum of money into Court. P objected but admitted that, upon a settlement of accounts between himself and L, the sum demanded would be found due by him to L. ## JUDGMENT.

Piggott, J.—The facts out of which these two connected second appeals arise may conveniently be stated as follows:—Raja Dirgbijai Singh, the plaintiff respondent in this Court, employed one Lala Manni Lal as a contractor to build a house for him. It has never been denied that, on a settlement of accounts, some money would be found due to Manni Lal from the Raja in consequence of the performance of this contract, but there was a very decided difference of opinion between the parties concerned as to the amount so due. In the meantime, Manni Lal seems to have got into financial difficulties. At any rate, we know that more than one decree was in execution against him and that he was not prepared to pay up even the small amounts involved in the two decrees which will be presently referred to. The holder of one of these decrees was Mahadeo Prasad, the appellant in Second Appeal No. 1399 of 1917. He took out execution and applied to the Execution Court, that of the Munsif of Allahabad, to attach for his benefit any debt which might be due to Manni Lal from Raja Dirgbijai Singh. This attachment was made under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 46, of the Civil Procedure Code, and, so far, the proceedings of the Execution Court were admittedly correct. The learned Munsif, however, went on to pass an order directing the Raja to pay into Court a sum of money, apparently Rs. 1,000, for the benefit of the decree-holder, Mahadeo Prasad. It is not denied now that, under the Code of Civil Procedure, the Munsif had no right to make any such order. The Raja presented a petition of objection on the 11th of February 1914 in which he put forward various reasons why the Execution Court should not require him to pay in this money; but in this petition he made the important admission that, although the accounts between himself and Manni Lal were still unsettled, he had no doubt that a sum of, at any rate, Rs. 1,000, or thereabouts, would be found due from him to Manni Lal upon proper settlement. The learned Munsif, acting on this admission, overruled all the objections preferred by the Raja and passed a positive order that the money should be paid into Court by a fixed date. This date was postponed from time to time and, in the month of July 1914, we find the Raja petitioning the Court for two months' further time within which to make the required payment. Finally, in the month of January 1915, the Munsif passed an order that a house belonging to Raja Dirgbijai Singh should be attached and sold unless the required deposit of Rs. 1,000 were made. Here, again, it is admitted that the Execution Court was wrong, the learned Munsif not having power under any provision of the Code of Civil Procedure to pass such an order. Under pressure of this order, the Raja finally paid into Court a sum of Rs. 975. This was accepted as sufficient and was eventually divided between Mahadeo Prasad, the original attaching creditor, and one Sheikh Habibullah, the holder of another decree against Lala Manni Lal, who applied for rateable distribution. The present suit was originally brought by Raja Dirgbijai Singh against Mahadeo Prasad only; but Sheikh Habibullah was subsequently added as a defendant, and the claim was to recover from each of these defendants, with interest, the money which he had taken out of the Munsif's Court from the deposit of Rs. 975. The suit was resisted on various grounds and disposed of by the learned Subordinate Judge in a very brief and summary judgment. The Trial Court seems to have held that it was quite sufficient to give the plaintiff a cause of action that he had paid in the sum of Rs. 975 under pressure of an attachment order which the Execution Court ought not to have passed. In dealing with the merits of the case he discussed one point only, and that was in connection with a plea taken by the defendants. It appears that Manni Lal made an assignment of whatever money might be due to him from the Raja to two persons, Bishehar Das and Paras Ram, the latter of whom was his sister's husband. These persons brought a suit against the Raja as assignees limiting their claim to a sum of Rs. 15,000. In his written statement Raja Dirgbijai Singh distinctly pleaded that the sum of Rs. 975 deposited by him in the Court of the Munsif of Allahabad was a good and valid discharge of his debt to Manni Lal pro tanto, and that this payment should be taken into account in settling the amount, if any, due to the plaintiffs. As it happened, this suit was not tried out but the Raja compromised with the plaintiffs for a sum of Rs. 4,250 and a consent-decree was passed accordingly. In the suit out of which the two appeals now before us arise, the defendants made it part of their case that, in settling the terms of this compromise, the Raja had in fact received credit for this sum of Rs. 975, so that he was no loser by reason of the deposit made by him in the Execution Court. The learned Subordinate Judge held that it was not proved by convincing evidence that credit had been given for this item to the Raja in settling the terms of the compromise, and he seems to have accepted Raja Dirgbijai Singh's statement to the effect that credit was not given him. Upon this finding, the suit was decreed against both defendants in proportion to their liabilities as set forth in the amended plaint. Both defendants appealed to the District Judge. In the memorandum of appeal filed by Mahadeo Prasad the point is distinctly taken that the plaintiff had failed to show that he had suffered any loss or damage and, further, that he had admitted his liability as debtor to Lala Manni Lal, to the extent of at least Rs. 1,000, before he made the payment of Rs. 975 into the Execution Court. These pleas obviously go direct to the merits of the case; connected with them was a further plea of a legal nature, to the effect that the deposit in the Execution Court was made under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 46, of the Code of Civil Procedure, without any condition whatever, and that no suit would lie to recover any sum of money so paid. The learned District Judge disposed of the two appeals in a careful judgment, the greater part of which, however, is devoted to a discussion of the supposed legal difficulties in the way of the plaintiff's maintaining the suit. On the merits of the case he says exceedingly little, and what he does say is distinctly less favourable to the plaintiff than is the finding of the Trial Court. In dealing with the question of the compromise under which the Raja paid Rs. 4,250 to Bishehar Das and Paras Ram as assignees of Manni Lal, the learned District Judge says that he is not prepared to find on the evidence before him, affirmatively, that this item was taken into account in settling the terms of the compromise. He does not say that the plaintiff had satisfied him, either by his own statement or by any other evidence on the record, that the item in question was not so taken into account. On the appeal of Habibullah the learned District Judge had to deal with one plea peculiar to this defendant. It was contended that, even, if any tort had been committed entitling the plaintiff to relief, the responsibility for the same lay wholly on the shoulders of Mahadeo Prasad, Habibullah having had nothing to do with obtaining from the Execution Court any of the orders the validity of which was impeached in the plaint, but having merely applied for rateable distribution in respect of a sum of Rs. 975 which was lying to the credit of the judgment debtor Lala Manni Lal in the Court of the Munsif of Allahabad. With regard to this plea the learned District Judge contents himself with saying that Habibullah had got hold of money of the Raja's, which the Raja was under no legal obligation to pay, and that for this reason alone the Raja was entitled to get it back from him. Mahadeo Prasad and Sheikh Habibullah have filed separate appeals in this Court; but, except as regards the last point above noticed, these appeals proceed upon common grounds. There has been a good deal of argument before us with regard to certain questions of law supposed to be raised by the pleadings. On behalf of the plaintiff-respondent we have been referred to a number of cases, of which it is sufficient to mention that relied upon by the District Judge, the case of Kanhaiya Lal v. National Bank of India (1). The principle involved in these rulings I understand to be this, that if a decree holder obtains an order for attachment of property belonging to a third person, representing the same as the property of his judgment debtor, it is open to the third person so aggrieved to protect himself by paying into Court under protest the amount of the decree and subsequently maintaining a suit to recover the same from the decree-holder. It does not seem to me that this principle has any real application to the facts of the present case. Broadly speaking, my opinion regarding these two appeals is, that the Courts below have assumed in favour of the plaintiff that he is entitled to equitable relief and have then proceeded to hold that there is nothing in law to prevent him from obtaining that relief by means of a suit against the two decree-holders who divided between them the money deposited by him in the Execution

Court. The real question, however, is whether the plaintiff, on whom the burden of proof lay, has made out any case for equitable relief. In argument before us, it has been sought to support the claim with reference to rules 58 and 65 of Order XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure, and also with reference to the equitable principle embodied in section 72 of the Indian Contract Act. I do not myself think that it would be possible, without violent straining of language, to bring this case within the provisions of rule 58 above mentioned; but even if it were so, the only effect would be to give rise to an objection absolutely fatal to the plaintiff's suit. The order of the Execution Court which really prejudices the rights of Raja Dirgbijai Singh was the order of the 11th of February 1914, overruling his objection and directing him positively to deposit in Court a sum of Rs. 1,000 for the benefit of Mahadeo Prasad, decree-holder. If any cause of action did accrue to the Raja under the rules to which reference has been made, it accrued to him on that date, and the present suit having been filed on the 21st of February 1916, is well beyond limitation from the date of the said order. It is even beyond limitation if reference be made to the date of the attachment of Raja Dirgbijai Singh's house, having been brought a little over a year after the date of the said attachment. The plaintiff's suit can only succeed, if at all, with reference to the equitable principle embodied in section 72 of Act No. 1X of 1872 to which reference has already been made. That section lays down that a person to whom money has been paid by mistake or under coercion must re-pay or return it. Obviously, the section implies that the money was not really due to the person to whom it was paid and this is made clear by the illustrations. The whole point in this case is, in my opinion, that Raja Dirgbijai Singh, when he made his deposit of Rs. 975 in the Court of the Munsif, did so under an admission that he was in fact indebted to Lala Manni Lal at least to this extent.

When this point was made clear in the course of argument in this Court, the learned counsel for the plaintiff's respondents, who argued his client's case throughout with great keenness and ability, fell back upon a contention to which no reference whatever is to be found in either of the judgments of the Courts below. He called attention to the fact that from the documentary evidence on the record it would appear that the assignment made by Lala Manni Lal of the debt due to him by Raja Dirgbijai Singh, in favour of Bisheeshar Das and Paras Ram, had been made in the month of September 1913, that is to say, before the order of the Munsif of Allahabad directing him to pay money into his Court for the benefit of Mahadeo Prasad, and long before that payment was actually made. On this we were asked to hold that, as a matter of fact, no debt was due from Raja Dirgbijai Singh to Manni Lal at the time when Mahadeo Prasad obtained his order of attachment and brought pressure to bear through the Court on Raja Dirgbijai Singh to pay this sum of Rs. 975 for his benefit. The only difficulty I have felt is, whether this contention ought to be allowed to prevail. It involves a very definite shifting of position on the part of Raja Dirgbijai Singh from that taken up by him in the Execution Court. It is quite true that, in one of his petitions of objection addressed to the Munsif of Allahabad, he mentions the fact that Bisheeshar Das, as assignee of some part at any rate of the debt due to Manni Lal, was pressing him with notices to pay the same. He puts this forward as one of the reasons why the Court should not order him to make any deposit on account of that debt. This plea is, in my opinion, obviously controlled and governed by the Raja's express admission that, upon a settlement of accounts, a sum of at least Rs. 1,000 would be found due from him to Manni Lal, and in view of what took place in the Execution Court, I very much doubt whether, in any event, Raja Dirgbijai Singh could have been allowed to maintain a suit for recovery of the money upon a plea wholly inconsistent with this admission. My principal point against him, however, is that there is no indication of such a plea in his plaint. He nowhere makes it a ground for relief that he was not indebted to Manni Lal at all at the time when he paid the sum of Rs. 975 into the Munsif's Court. He bases his claim to relief purely and simply on the ground upon which it has been decreed by the Courts below, namely, that he had paid the money under compulsion of a process of attachment issued against him by the Execution Court which was contrary to law and wholly outside the powers of such Court to issue. On the facts of the case as a whole, having regard to what is apparent from the record as to Manni Lal's circumstances, and taking into consideration the fact that the claim brought against Raja Dirgbijai Singh by Manni Lal's transferees was compromised for less than a one-third of its amount, I have formed a very poor opinion of the plaintiff's case on equitable grounds. I certainly do not think that he ought to be allowed to succeed in this Court upon a plea to which no reference is to be found in his plaint, or in either of the judgments of the Courts below. If the defendants, Mahadeo Prasad and Habibullah, had definitely been put on their guard by the pleadings that the plaintiff's case was, that Mahadeo Prasad had misled the Court upon a question of fact, when he alleged that there was a debt due from Raja Dirgbijai Singh to Lala Manni Lal and sought an attachment of the same for his benefit, obviously these defendants would have been entitled to ask the Court to go into the whole question of the alleged transfer of that debt by Manni Lal, and they would have been in no way bound by the fact that Raja Dirgbijai Singh had seen fit to deal with the transferees on the basis of there being a valid transfer in their favour. As the record stands, I think the defendants are clearly entitled to hold the Raja to the admission made by him in his pleading before the Execution Court, to the effect that there was a debt of at least Rs. 1,000 due from him to Manni Lal, and to no one else. If this view is correct, it follows beyond all question that the third clause of rule 46 of Order XXI, of the Code of Civil Procedure came into operation and that the payment made into Court by Raja Dirgbijai Singh discharged him from liability towards Manni Lal to the extent of Rs. 975, as effectively as if he had made the payment direct to Manni Lal and obtained a receipt from the latter. The Courts below seem to me to have wholly overlooked the effect of this provision. It operates quite independently of any question as to the circumstances under which the payment was made, or the motive which may have influenced Raja Dirgbijai Singh in making it. If he really owed Rs. 975 to Manni Lal, and paid it into Court, and thereby obtained a valid discharge to this extent, he has no claim in equity to recover that money from Mahadeo Prasad or Habibullah, who got possession of it under the orders of a competent Court as money belonging to their judgment-debtor, Manni Lal, and lying to his credit in the Execution Court. I have said enough to dispose of these appeals and I do not think it necessary to discuss in detail the special plea taken by Habibullah; but I feel bound to say that I do not see what cause of action against Habibullah is disclosed by the plaint or made out by the evidence produced in the two Courts below. For these reasons, I would allow both these appeals, set aside the decrees of both the Courts below, and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout, including in this Court-fees on the higher scale.

WALSH, J.—I entirely agree. Having regard to the way in which the case was fought, both parties treated Manni Lal and his transferees as being in substance the same person, and the transfer as making no difference to the real merits which had to be decided.

In my opinion, at the time when the compromise was entered into, the Raja could not have been ignorant of or have forgotten the sum of money which had been paid into Court. Either he intended to treat it as a good payment to Manni Lal or his transferees, or he intended to keep it up his sleeve and when the compromise was carried out, to bring a suit to get the money back. He must have known that Manni Lal regarded the money as having been paid pro tanto as a discharge of his debt to Mahadeo Prasad. In my opinion, the Raja could not in equity enter into the compromise with the intention of bringing a suit to recover this sum of money, without making it one of the terms of the compromise that the compromise was entered into without prejudice to his right to recover the Rs. 975. In other words, the compromise undoubtedly involved on the part of the creditors the payment of a sum of Rs. 4,975, and the Raja was perfectly well aware of that fact when he entered into the compromise. That being so, this action is an abuse of the process of the Court and, therefore, ought to be dismissed.

By THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that we allow both these appeals, set aside the decrees of both the Courts below and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 963 OF 1919.

August 16, 1920.

Present:—Sir Norman Macleod, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Fawcett.

DATTATRAYA PURSHOTTAM

PARNEKAR—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

RADHABAI BALKRISHNA TRIMBAK

—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 2, 97—Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), ss. 2, 13—Finding that party is agriculturist, whether preliminary decree—Appeal, whether lies.

A finding that a party is an agriculturist is not by itself an adjudication which can be embodied in a decree and is not appealable, though it may result in the plaint being returned for presentation in the proper Court. Therefore, a Judge should never accede to an application to draw up in the form of a decree a finding on the question whether a party is an agriculturist or not. [p. 868, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Nasik, in Appeal No. 82 of 1919, confirming the decree passed by the Joint Subordinate Judge at Nasik, in Civil Suit No. 293 of 1918.

Mr. D. O. Virkar, for the Appellants.

Mr. D. R. Patwardhan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiffs sued to recover Rs. 3,637, being the balance due on two mortgage-deeds, dated 28th June 1891 and 26th September 1892. The defendant in his written statement contended that he was an agriculturist and that the suit should be tried under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. The following issues were raised as preliminary issues:—

(1) Whether the defendant is an agriculturist within the meaning of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act?

DATTATRAYA PURSHOTTAM PARNEKAR v. RADHABAI BALKRISHNA TRIMBAK.

(2) Whether the suit is maintainable without a Succession Certificate? And

(3) Whether a certificate under the Pensions Act is necessary?

On the first issue the Judge found that the defendant was an agriculturist. The second issue was found in the affirmative and the third in the negative. Further issues were then drawn up:—

1. Whether the mortgage-bonds in suit are proved?

2. What is proved to be the consideration of the said bonds?

3. What is proved to be the amount received by plaintiffs towards satisfaction of the said bonds?

4. Whether the suit is within time?

5. What is found due on taking accounts under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act?

6. How should the amount due be made payable?

Unfortunately, the plaintiff applied to the Court to draw up a decree on the finding on the first issue and a decree was drawn up.

An appeal was filed against that decree which was admitted by the District Judge. The appeal was dismissed, the learned Judge being of opinion that the defendant was rightly held to be an agriculturist. I think he was wrong in holding that an appeal lay, and he failed to appreciate in the right way the remarks of Mr. Justice Heaton in Municipal Committee of Nasik v. Collector of Nasik (1).

The importance of the question arises from section 97 of the Code, which enacts that if a party aggrieved by a preliminary decree passed after the commencement of the Code does not appeal from such decree he shall be precluded from disputing its correctness in any appeal which may be preferred from the final decree, thus giving effect to the opinion of the dissenting Judges in Khadem Hossein v. Emdad Hossein (2), that in an appeal against the final decree in a partition suit it was not open to the appellant to question the correctness of the preliminary order or decree for partition when no appeal was preferred against such order within the time allowed by law. Such an order was, according to legal phraseology, a preliminary or interlocutory decree, but it was not a decree as defined by section 2 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 although it was appealable as if it had been a decree.

In section 2 of the Code of 1908 'decree' was defined so as to bring preliminary or interlocutory decrees within the definition of a decree, but the only change in procedure introduced by the definition of decree in section 2, combined with section 97, was in respect of the right of an aggrieved party to appeal from a preliminary decree. The right which he had before to wait until the final decree was passed and then appeal from both the preliminary and the final decree was taken away.

But the impression has gained ground that the kind of preliminary decrees which can be passed has been indefinitely extended by the Code of 1908. Constant applications are made to the Judges in the Mofussil Courts to embody in the form of decrees judicial pronouncements which are not judgments according to the Code, on the ground that the aggrieved party may be debarred from raising the question in an appeal from the final decree. This apprehension may be genuine in some cases but it too often is merely the cover for deliberate obstructions to the final decision of the suit. The object is easy of attainment. The Judge is asked to draw up a decree on the ground that he has decided something which conclusively determines the right of the parties with regard to one of the matters in controversy in the suit. The Judge declines. An application is made to compel him to draw up a decree. Whether successful or not, the hearing of the suit is delayed for months. If the Judge consents, there is at once an appeal. In this way, litigation, which is in any event sufficiently protracted, can be indefinitely prolonged.

In my opinion, the above impression is entirely erroneous and has arisen chiefly from the failure to observe the rules of procedure laid down by the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, with regard to the institution and hearing of suits. The solution of the question before us is to be found not in any of the numerous cases which deal with the question but by a careful consideration of those rules which, with some minor alterations, re-enact the corresponding sections of the Code of 1882.

DAITATRAYA PURSHOTTAM PARNEKAR & RADHABAI BALKRISHNA TRIMBAK.

They prescribe when and in what circumstances the Court is to pronounce judgment and it is only when a judgment has been pronounced in conformity with those rules that it can be embodied in a decree.

The real question, therefore, seems to me to be not what is or what is not a preliminary decree, but when may a Trial Judge pronounce a judgment which has to be embodied in a decree. Then the stage of the case at which judgment is pronounced will determine whether the decree is preliminary or final. It may be as well to set out, as briefly as possible, the course a suit should follow under the rules. When a suit has been duly instituted a summons may be issued to the defendant to appear: Order V, rule 1. The Court shall determine at the time of issuing the summons whether it shall be for the settlement of issues only, or for the final disposal of the suit: Order V, rule 5. Order XIV deals with the settlement of issues. At the first hearing of the suit the Court shall proceed to frame and record the issues on which the right decision of the case appears to depend: Order XIV, rule 1 (5).

Where issues both of law and of fact arise in the same suit and the Court is of opinion that the case or any part thereof may be disposed of on the issues of law only, it shall try those issues first, and for that purpose may, if it thinks fit, postpone the settlement of the issues of fact until after the issues of law have been determined: Order XIV, rule 2. Nothing is said regarding the procedure at the trial of such issues, but following the analogy of Order XV, rule 3, judgment should only be pronounced when the finding disposes of the case or a part of the case which would then be final pro tanto. Order XV deals with the disposal of a suit at the first hearing. Rule 3 seems to amplify Order XIV, rule 2, as it refers to issues of fact as well as of law. If the Court is satisfied that no further argument or evidence than the parties can at once adduce is required upon such issues as may be sufficient for the decision of the suit, and that no injustice will result from proceeding with the suit forthwith, the Court may proceed to determine such issues, and if the finding thereon is sufficient for the decision may pronounce judgment accordingly. If the finding is not sufficient for the decision the Court shall postpone the further hearing and shall fix a day for proceeding with the suit. Although this rule appears to be applicable only to the first hearing of a suit it seems obvious that it must also apply, by reason of Order XVII, to a further hearing of a case after all the issues or issues of law only have been settled at the first hearing.

It is only when the finding on an issue is sufficient for the decision of the suit or a part of the suit that the Court may pronounce judgment. When the finding is not sufficient for the decision, the suit must be postponed for further hearing.

Under section 33 the Court, after the case has been heard, shall pronounce judgment and on such judgment a decree shall follow.

Order XX deals with judgment and decree. Before rule 12 of that Order there is no provision in the Code for any other judgments except (1) those which are given at the end of the hearing, (2) those which decide the case or presumably a part of the case by findings on certain issues only.

Order XX, rules 12 to 16 and 18, and Order XXXIV, rules 2, 4 and 7, deal with certain classes of suits in which there can be an adjudication which, though it determines the rights of the parties with regard to the matter in controversy in the suit, does not completely dispose of the suit. They enable the Court to pronounce a judgment which must be embodied in a decree, before the end of the suit, but they carefully prescribe on what points judgment shall be given.

The suits referred to above are the most common in which preliminary decrees can be passed. I may also mention suits for damages in which the plaintiff establishes his right to receive damages but an inquiry is necessary as to the amount before a final decree can be passed. The principle remains the same. The judgment should ordinarily come at the end of the case. But there are cases where, although the Court can decide all questions relating to the rights and liabilities of the parties, the details of the decree have to be ascertained by a further inquiry, or time is allowed to a defendant before the decision becomes final.

I do not see why this principle should not be applied to suits under the Dekkhan

DATTATRAYA PURBHOTTAM PARNEKAR v. RADHABAI BALKRISHNA TRIMBAK.

Agriculturists' Relief Act. If the rights and liabilities of the parties can be determined and accounts taken at one hearing no difficulty arises although for form's sake it may be necessary to draw up a preliminary and a final decree. If the Court arrives at a stage where the rights and liabilities of the parties have been determined but an inquiry is necessary to ascertain the state of accounts between the parties judgment may be given on which a preliminary decree can be drawn up. But the finding that a party is an agriculturist is not by itself an adjudication which can be embodied in a decree though it may result in the plaint being returned for presentation in the proper Court.

Issues of law on which a case may be disposed of most often raise questions of jurisdiction or of limitation. But a finding that the Court has jurisdiction or that the plaintiff has brought his suit within the time prescribed by the law of limitation, does not determine the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit, it merely enables the Court to proceed to inquire into those rights. So, too, an issue of res judicata found in the plaintiff's favour enables the Court to deal with the merits of the case.

It has been contended that decisions in the plaintiff's favour on such issues as these determine his right to sue which is a matter of controversy in the suit but a consideration of the analysis of rights in Holland's Jurisprudence will make it clear that there is no such right known to law as the 'right to sue'. A plaintiff in a suit claims to be entitled to a remedial right on the consequence of an infraction of an antecedent right.

"A remedial right is in itself a mere potentiality deriving its value from the support which it can obtain from the power of the State. The mode in which that support may be secured in order to the realisation of a remedial right is prescribed by that department of law which has been called adjective, because it exists only for the sake of substantive law, but is probably better known as procedure. It comprises the rules for, (i) selecting the jurisdiction which has cognizance of the matter in question, (ii) ascertaining the Court which is appropriate for the decision of the matter, (iii) setting in motion the machinery of the Court so as to procure its decision, etc." Holland's Jurisprudence, pages 280, 291.

The opinion I have expressed on this question in no way affects the rights of an aggrieved party to obtain relief when appealing to a higher Court. I have only made it clear when he must appeal and I have shown that he is not debarred from appealing at the end of the case from certain findings during the hearing of the cases which merely decide that the suit must proceed, or which decide questions without disposing wholly or partially of the case. This will put an end to the applications which are constantly being made to the High Court to compel the Trial Courts to draw up decrees based on such findings instead of waiting until the end of the case, thus enabling a party to prolong the hearing of the suit for an indefinite time and paralysing the administration of justice. One thing is perfectly clear and that is, that a formal expression by a decree of a finding by a Court that a party is an agriculturist cannot conclusively determine the rights of the parties with regard to any or all of the matters in controversy in the suit. Nothing is said in the Code about a preliminary issue, but a decree is preliminary when a further proceeding is to be taken before the suit is disposed of. It follows then, in my opinion, that a Judge should never accede to an application to draw up in the form of a decree a finding on the question whether a party is an agriculturist or not. Undoubtedly, that is an issue which is the first issue to be tried in the case, and a decision may be given on it; but it by no means follows that because that is the first issue to be tried, therefore, it is a preliminary issue on which a decree can be drawn up. The whole case must be decided first before the judgment can be pronounced. There will be then a judgment deciding the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in suit, and then it will rightly be the subject of a decree. The result will be, in this case, that as there was no appeal, the case must go back to the Trial Court to continue the hearing from the point at which it was left off. This appeal is dismissed with costs.

FAWCETT, J.—I quite agree in the general principles laid down by the learned Chief Justice in the judgment just pronounced. In regard to the decision in Municipal Committee of Nasik v. Collector of Nasik (1) I think Mr. Justice Heaton never intended to say that the Court should frame a preliminary decree directing accounts to be taken under section 13, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, until the proper stage had been arrived at for such a preliminary decree. The principle applicable is that judicially laid down in regard to references for inquiry and report. This is that the power to order such a reference is only exercised in cases where the question cannot conveniently be decided in the usual way by the Court, as, for instance, where a prolonged examination of documents or accounts, or some specific or local investigation is necessary, or where, as may be the case when damages have to be assessed, the inquiry involves questions of detail which would occupy too much time in Court [Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume I, Article 1000, at page 484, and D. N. Ghose & Bros v. Loput Narain (3)]. Accordingly, it is a general rule in cases falling under Order XX, rule 16, of the Code that the main points at issue in the case should be decided first by the Court, and a preliminary decree framed only when nothing more remains to be done than the ministerial function of drawing up the account in accordance with the directions of the Court. It is, in my opinion, an abuse of the procedure intended by the Code to draw up a preliminary decree directing accounts to be taken under section 13 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, before, for instance, as in this case, it had been even decided whether the mortgage sued upon was proved. Personally I am inclined to think that it will be seldom necessary under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act to draw up a preliminary decree under Order XX, rule 16. That is a provision of a general nature and does not, in my opinion, detract from the power given to the Court by a special Act, namely, section 13 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, to take an account in accordance with the provisions of that section. My experience is that, in ordinary cases, the Court can itself take the account with the help of a clerk for any former calculations, and that there is no real necessity for a preliminary decree under which a Commissioner would have to be formally appointed and the ultimate decision of the suit almost inevitably delayed. I think, therefore, it is only in exceptional cases, that there should be a preliminary decree of the kind referred to in Mr. Justice Heaton's judgment already mentioned.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 10, Sch. II, s. 18—Registrar in Insolvency, reference to—Mortgage, validity of, power of Registrar to decide—Appeal from order of Registrar—Limitation.

Where a reference is made to the Registrar in Insolvency under section 18, Schedule II of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, upon the application of certain persons alleging themselves to be mortgagees of an insolvent's estate directing them to prove their mortgage before him, the Registrar has no jurisdiction to deal with the question of the validity of the mortgage even though the parties consent and agree to his doing so, and by his decision adversely affect parties interested who are not sui juris. [p. 892, col. 1.]

The period of 90 days provided by section 101 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act runs not from the date of the findings being filed or signed, but from the date of the matter being completed, and the report being signed. [p. 891, col. 2.]

the Insolvency Registrar of this Court. The facts are shortly as follows:—On the 23rd July 1914 Lalbehari Shah and others were adjudicated insolvents upon the petition of a creditor, one Motilal Boid. He was a creditor for Rs. 6,43,000, and he filed a retainer through an Attorney Mr. S. M. Datt to represent him in the insolvency proceedings. Motilal Boid is the father of the present appellants before me. He died on the 29th February 1916 leaving him surviving his widow, Panni Bibee, and the appellants his infant sons. He also left a brother Dhonraj Boid. On the 7th August, 1916 an application was made by the brother as next friend of the infants for examination of certain witnesses under section 36 of the Insolvency Act. The retainer was signed by him and he made an affidavit that he had no interest adverse to the infants. He signed as next friend and the retainer that he gave to his Attorney was in respect of all the proceedings. On the 23rd August 1916 the mortgagees got an order to prove their mortgage before the Registrar in insolvency under section 16 of the Second Schedule of the Insolvency Act, and the Official Assignee was directed to sell the premises No. 3/2, Shovabazar. On the 1st September 1916 Panni Bibee was appointed, under the Guardians and Wards Act, as guardian of her infant sons and on the 16th September 1916 she gave to her brother-in-law Dhonraj Boid a power-of-attorney to act on her behalf. On the 18th September 1916 the mortgaged properties were sold by the Official Assignee. On the 2nd February 1917, Panni Bibee applied for an order to examine the mortgagees under section 36 of the Insolvency Act and an order was made for their examination. It is said that Panni Bibee made the application really as next friend of the infants and in error of the fact that she was not their next friend. Be that as it may, it appears that all the proceedings before the Registrar in Insolvency were conducted on behalf of Panni Bibee not as next friend of the infants but as a creditor of the insolvents' estate and, of course, she was a creditor of her husband's estate by reason of her position as his widow. On the 6th July 1918 the examination of the witnesses took place, that is to say, of the mortgagees, for a period of two days and the Assistant Referee, who was then acting as the Registrar in Insolvency, stated that he would go into the question of the validity of the mortgages, although I understand that he arrived at no final decision on that day. On the 3rd February 1919 Mr. Ramfry, the Registrar in Insolvency, stated that he thought that he would go into the question of the validity of the mortgages and, on the 17th February 1919 the parties agreed to the question of the validity of the mortgages being gone into before him. From the 21st to the 27th February the witnesses on behalf of the mortgagees were examined before him and from the 19th March to the 10th April the witnesses called on behalf of the appellants were examined. On the 12th July 1919 the Registrar in Insolvency signed his findings and, just before the figures of the amount due on the mortgage occurs this, "I, therefore, find and report that there is now due on the mortgage the sum of Rs. 27,000, for principal and interest." Those findings were filed on the 15th July 1919. On the 25th July 1919 the report of the Registrar in Insolvency was settled and passed and he there states that he had gone into the question of the validity of the mortgages and considered the facts placed before him and he holds that the mortgage is a valid one and that the consideration alleged therein was duly paid, and then he goes to state what is due to the mortgagees. On the 14th August 1919 the report was signed and filed on that day and on the 3rd September 1919 the present appeal was filed. Some dispute has arisen as to whether in fact it was presented on the 3rd September 1919, or on the 4th September. What happened, I understand, was that on the 3rd September it was tendered on the Original Side in the English Department and that the Attorney who tendered the appeal was then told that it should have been presented in the Insolvency Jurisdiction of the Court and apparently it was presented in the Insolvency Jurisdiction of the Court on the 4th September 1919. It is not contested, certainly for the purpose of this application, that the time to file the appeal, if otherwise in time, would have extended until the re-opening of the Courts after the long vacation. Accordingly, it does not seem to me to matter whether it was in fact filed on the 3rd or 4th September. On these facts being stated to me,

two preliminary objections were taken on behalf of the mortgagees. First, it was said that the appeal is made or presented by infants without their having any next friend and I have an application made by the mortgagees asking that the appeal should be dismissed with costs to be paid by the Attorney on the ground that no next friend had been named on behalf of the infants. On the other hand, I have another application before me for the amendment of the appeal by inserting the name of the next friend. It seems to me that, having regard to the provisions of Order XXXII, rule 2, I have a discretion as to how I shall deal with the matter, when a plaint or other proceedings have been taken without the infant being represented by a next friend, and it does not seem to me, therefore, that there is any substance in this preliminary objection because I shall accede to the application to amend the appeal upon the addition of the name of the next friend, upon the costs of the mortgagees of appearing on this application and the costs of their application, to which I have already referred, being paid. But there is a more substantial preliminary objection, and that is that the appeal was filed out of time. It is said that the Registrar's findings having been signed on the 12th July 1919 and filed on the 15th, time runs as from one or other of these dates or, in any case, at the very latest, from the 25th July 1919, when the report was settled and passed. On the other hand, it is said on behalf of the appellants that time did not commence to run until the report was signed by the Registrar on the 14th August 1919. Now, it appears that, in accordance with the practice of the office, time is taken to run as from the time that the report is signed because I find a note on the application for appeal "report signed 14th August 1918—appeal in time"—this being signed by the Registrar in Insolvency. It, therefore, remains to consider the provisions of section 101 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act in order to ascertain whether the preliminary objection on this point should prevail or not. Section 101 provides that the period of limitation for an appeal from any act or decision of the Official Assignee or from an order made by an officer of the Court empowered under section 6 shall be 20 days from the date of such act, decision or order, as the case may be. Some discussion took place before me on this preliminary question as to whether the Registrar was a person empowered under section 6 of the Act. It is not necessary for me to deal with that now, for that is a question which will arise if I decide that the preliminary objection is not well-founded. So it only remains for me to decide whether the order of an officer of the Court referred to in section 101 is, under the circumstances, the findings that were filed on the 15th July or the report that was actually signed on the 14th August. The conclusion that I have come to is, that the 20 days provided by section 101 run not as from the findings being filed or signed, but as from the matter being completed and the report being signed. That is to say, when the matter is completed and the parties know their position. That, therefore, disposes of the preliminary objection and it now remains for me to deal with the appeal on its merits; but before I do so, I should add, as the matter has been ventilated, that it does not seem to me to matter whether Panni Bibee was alone before the Registrar or whether the infants, unrepresented by a next friend, were before the Registrar, because, even if the infants were not before the Registrar, it is conceded that, being affected by the order that the Registrar has made, they are entitled in any case to appeal. That disposes, then, of the preliminary objection and the two applications that are made, that is to say, with regard to the amendment of the application and with regard to the dismissal of the appeal. I now proceed to deal with the appeal on its merits.

I now come to deal with the appeal as presented. The first ground of appeal is, that the Registrar had no jurisdiction to go into the question of the validity or otherwise of the said mortgage in the reference directed to him, and that he erred in adjudicating on the same although the parties consented to that course being adopted.

The other grounds of appeal are, secondly that the mortgage transaction was fictitious; thirdly, that he should have found on the evidence that the adjudication was collusive, and so on.

Counsel appearing on behalf of the appellants has stated before me that all he desires to do at the present time is to question the jurisdiction of the Registrar to deal with the validity of the mortgage under the reference to him under Schedule II, section 18 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, and he asks that there should be deleted from the report all the findings of the Registrar in Insolvency with regard to the validity of the mortgage, and that is the only question that is now before me on this appeal. It seems to me that, although the Registrar dealt with this question by the consent and agreement of the parties, he had no jurisdiction to deal with a question of this kind. Section 6 of the Insolvency Act states what are the matters that can be referred to the Registrar in Insolvency, viz. to hear debtors' petitions; to hold public examinations of insolvents; to make any order or exercise any jurisdiction prescribed as proper to be made or exercised in Chambers; to hear and determine any unopposed or ex parte application; to examine any person under section 35. The only one of these headings which this could possibly come under would be heading 6 (2) (c), but that heading only deals with matters to be dealt with in Chambers, and rule 5 of the Insolvency Rules specifically lays down what are the matters that are to be heard and determined in open Court which are, among others, 5 (d), applications to set aside or avoid any settlement, conveyance, transfer security or payment or to declare for or against the title of the Official Assignee to any property adversely claimed. It seems to me that you only have to read section 6 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act and rule 5 to arrive at the conclusion that the Registrar in Insolvency, as indeed I think he thought himself, had no jurisdiction to deal with a matter of this kind, apart from consent of parties. He did so, having regard to the consent and on the footing that all the parties interested were sui juris which turns out not to be the case. In this view, the appeal succeeds upon the only point which is now raised before me, that is to say, as to whether the Registrar in Insolvency had any jurisdiction to deal with this question and by his decision adversely affect the infants. I am expressing no opinion on this appeal with regard to the validity of the mortgage and whether it is now open to the appellants to attack the mortgage or not. I make no order as to costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 131, 144—Inamdar—Suit to recover assessment—Adverse possession—Limitation—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 69, applicability of—Judi, payment of, by Inamdar—Sum paid, whether recoverable from occupancy tenants.

A suit to recover assessment by an Inamdar against a person who claims to have purchased the Inamdar's rights is governed by Article 144 and not by Article 131 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, and limitation begins to run from the date of the first non-payment of assessment [p. 843, col. 1.]

Article 141 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act applies only where the relationship of landlord and tenant or superior holder and occupant is established. Where no such relationship has ever existed, that Article is not applicable. [p. 843, col. 1.]

Section 69 of the Contract Act only applies when a person is interested in the payment of money which any other is bound by law to pay, and, therefore, if he pays it, he is entitled to be reimbursed by the other. [p. 493, col. 1.]

Judi is payable by an Inamdar to Government, and where he has been so remiss as to lose his right of levying assessment on occupancy tenants, he cannot recover the sum paid by him as judi from them under section 49 of the Contract Act, inasmuch as the tenants are not bound by law to pay judi. [p. 843, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Bijapur, in Appeals Nos. 138 and 139 of 1917, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Muddebihal, in Civil Suit No. 191 of 1916.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff sued to recover from the defendant as inferior holder the assessment and local fund cess for 1912-13 of certain lands in five villages. The Trial Court held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover as Inamdar, but allowed the claim for and judi local fund cess for the lands in suit to the extent of Rs. 140 10  $\frac{1}{2}$  under section 64 of the Indian Contract Act. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit altogether. The learned Judge held that the plaintiff was barred from recovering the assessment for the suit lands by the principle of res judicata, because certain suits had been filed by the defendant to recover possession of the land and mesne profits from the tenants and the plaintiff's husband was a party to those suits. But I do not think that the question, which is now in issue whether plaintiff is entitled to levy assessment against the defendant, was in issue in these suits though Padappa was a party. The learned Appellate Judge does not seem to have considered the question whether the defendant had acquired a right to the suit-lands by adverse possession. But it is admitted that these lands were purchased by the defendant in execution of a decree obtained against Kalava, the then Inamdar, in 1874. Therefore, he purchased all the Inamdar's rights including the right to levy assessment on the suit lands. No doubt, it was held in the litigation regarding other lands belonging to the Inamdars that the defendant had not purchased anything beyond the rights of Kalava, and that on her death Padappa was entitled to succeed. But, as a consequence of succeeding in that suit, Padappa took no steps either to levy assessment or to recover possession of the suit lands. It cannot be disputed that the present respondent has been in possession of the suit-lands for more than twelve years adversely against the plaintiff. It was suggested that the right to levy assessment was a recurring right and the period of limitation should be as prescribed by Article 131, according to which time begins to run when there has been a demand and refusal. That may very well be if the relationship of landlord and tenant or superior holder and occupant has ever existed. Once that relationship is established, then the mere non payment of rent or assessment would not be sufficient to enable the tenant or occupant to begin to set up a title by adverse possession. There must be some overt act, such as a refusal to pay the rent or assessment, before time begins to run. But here there was no relationship as regards the suit-lands between the Inamdar and the respondent. By the purchase at the sale at which the Inamdar's rights were put up for sale he was not recognized as in any way liable to pay assessment. Therefore, it cannot be said that there was any recurring right in the appellant, who now occupies the position of Inamdar, to recover the assessment. The decision, therefore, in Ganesh Vinayak v. Sitabai Narayan (1) can be distinguished. In my opinion, therefore, the respondent has clearly established a right to hold this land against the Inamdar free of assessment by adverse possession.

BHIMABAI PADAPPA DESAI v. SWAMIRAO SHRINIWAS PARWATI.

As regards the claim of the plaintiff which was allowed by the Trial Court, to recover judi and local fund cess, I agree with the learned Appellate Judge that it should be disallowed. The judi is payable in the lump sum by the Inamdar to Government, and if the Inamdar is so remiss as to lose his right of getting the assessment from the occupancy tenants, it cannot be said that the obligation to pay judi for those lands for which the payment of assessment was lost, falls upon the persons in occupation of them. Section 69 only applies when a person is interested in the payment of money which any other is bound by law to pay, and, therefore, if he pays it, he is entitled to be reimbursed by the other. Here it has not been proved that the defendant is bound by law to pay the judi. Therefore, if the plaintiff pays it, it must be considered it has been paid in his own interest and he certainly cannot be entitled to recover it from the defendant under section 69.

Therefore, the decision of the learned Appellate Judge must be confirmed and the appeal dismissed with costs.

Fawcett, J.—I concur. Reliance was placed for the appellant on the view taken in some reported cases that, under Article 131, in order that a recurring right of the kind specified in that Article should be time-barred, it is necessary for the defendant to show that there has been a definite demand and refusal. In my opinion, that view should be limited to cases where the circumstances are such that mere non compliance with the right does not of itself amount to a refusal. I would point out that, under Article 131, third column, limitation does not run from the time when the enjoyment of the right is first demanded and refused, but when the plaintiff is first refused the enjoyment of the right. If we compare this Article with Articles 85, 89 and 103, where the words used are 'demanded and refused,'

REOTI RAM v. SITA RAM.

it will be seen that it is rather reading into the Article words which are deliberately omitted from it, to say that under Article 131 there must be shown a definite demand, to which there was a refusal. In the present case the circumstances, in my opinion, are such that the non-payment of any rent or assessment by the defendant to the plaintiff necessarily constitute a refusal within the meaning of this Article. The defendant had acquired the right, title and interest of the Inamdar at the Court auction. There had been a lengthy litigation between the parties and the defendant was admittedly in adverse possession of the lands for a period which absolutely barred the plaintiff's right to recover them, although the plaintiff was successful in the litigation which went to the Privy Council.

I think, therefore, that, even supposing the case does fall under Article 131, the plaintiff was first refused the enjoyment of the right over twelve years before the institution of the present suit, and that his claim to levy any assessment is clearly barred.

On other points I agree with the learned Chief Justice.

EXECUTION SECOND APPEAL No. 1205 OF 1919.

SITA RAM—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—RESPONDENT.

Limitation—Decree directing payment within certain time—Court closed on last day—Payment made on day of re-opening—Decree, whether complied with.

Where a party is required by a decree to pay a certain sum of money within a certain period, and on the last day of that period the Court is closed, the payment of the money on the first day on which the Court re-opens is a payment in compliance with the decree.

Execution second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Farrukhabad, dated the 7th August 1919.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

This is an appeal against an order of the learned Munsif of Kanauj, holding that a sum of Rs. 500, deposited in Court by the judgment-debtor on 6th February 1919, has not been deposited in time. The decree in this suit for settlement of accounts was passed on 6th January 1919 and ordered that Rs. 500 was to be paid to the plaintiff within thirty days, and if the money was not paid within that period the plaintiff was to get a decree for the whole amount claimed with costs.

Application was made for tender on 4th February and as the Court was closed on 5th February owing to Basant Panchmi holiday the deposit was not made till 6th February.

As the first day is not counted, the period expired on 5th February. Under Order XXI, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, all money payable under a decree shall be paid either, (a) into Court, or (b) out of Court to the decree-holder, or etc. The judgment-debtor had the choice of methods (a) and (b). He might have employed (b) on 5th February. He could not employ (b) on 6th February as it was then time-barred. But by a number of rulings, Dabi Din Rai v. Muhammad Ali (1), for money paid under a pre-emption decree, Aratamudas Ayyangar v. Samiyappa Nadan (2), the payment on 6th February was in time, because the Court was closed on the last day of the period. The fact that (b) was barred is no reason why (a) should be barred when the Order XXI, rule 1, allows choice of either method. The appellant wrongly refers to section 5 of the Limitation Act. The analogy is with section 4 not section 5. I allow the appeal and hold that the Rs. 500, has been deposited in time.

Mr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In our opinion there is authority of this Court in the case of *Dabi Din Rai v. Appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Greaves.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Greaves, whereby he has, on an application by the respondents, directed an award made by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce Arbitration Tribunal on the 20th June 1919 to be taken off the file as of no effect.

The events which led to the award are not in controversy and may be briefly recited. On the 16th August 1918 the respondents sold to the appellants 100 bales of Japanese grey shirtings which had been purchased by them from the Nippon Munka Kabushiki Kaisha (Japan Cotton Trading Co.). The respondents allege that the appellants failed to take delivery, with the result that they had to re-sell the goods at a loss. On the 3rd May 1919 the buyers made a reference to the Arbitration Tribunal of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce under the arbitration clause contained in the contract. On the 21st May 1919 the sellers instituted a suit for damages for breach of contract. On the 20th June 1919 the award was made, and on the 1st July following, it was filed in Court. On the 22nd July the sellers applied to set aside the award. Mr. Justice Greaves has granted that application on the ground that, where an action has been commenced upon a contract which contains a provision for reference to arbitration, even if a reference to arbitration has been made before the commencement of the suit, the award is of no effect unless the suit has been stayed pending the arbitration. In support of this view, reliance has been placed upon the decision of the majority of the Court of Appeal in Doleman & Sons v. Ossett Corporation (1), which has been applied in this country in Dinabandhu Jana v. Durga Prasad Jana (2) and Appavu Rowther v. Seeni Rowther (3).

In Doleman & Sons v. Ossett Corporation (1) Fletcher Moulton, L. J., explained the position of the parties, when, notwithstanding an arbitration clause in the contract between them, a suit has been instituted by one of them, the law will not enforce the specific performance of an agreement to refer to arbitration, but if duly appealed to, it has the power, in its discretion, to refuse to a party the alternative of having the dispute settled by a Court of Law, and thus to leave him in the position of having no other remedy than to proceed by arbitration. If the Court has refused to stay an action or if the defendant has abstained from asking it to do so, the Court has seisin of the dispute and it is by its decision and by its decision alone, that the rights of the parties are settled. It follows that, in the latter case, the private tribunal, if it has ever come into existence, is functus officio, unless the parties agree de novo that the dispute shall be tried by arbitration and that the action itself shall be referred. There cannot be two tribunals, each with jurisdiction to insist on deciding the rights of the parties and to compel them to accept its decision. This is clearly involved in the proposition that the Courts will not allow their jurisdiction to be ousted. The same view was adopted by Farwell, L. J., when he stated that the plaintiff cannot be deprived of their right to have recourse to the Court when the agreement is a mere agreement to refer, unless the Court makes an order to that effect under section 4 of the English Arbitration Act, 1832, (corresponding to section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899). They can, of course, deprive themselves of such rights by their own act after writ, as, for example, by going on with the arbitration and obtaining an award; but when nothing has been done by them since writ, and the only matter relied upon is an award made since writ, without their knowledge or consent, under an agreement antecedent to the action, the plea is in fact and in truth a plea of the agreement and is bad, because there is no act of the plaintiffs subsequent to the writ on which reliance can be placed. It is not a question of revoking the submission; it is a question of construction of section 4 of the Act. The appellants have contended before us that the present case falls within the exception formulated by Farwell, L. J., by reason of the letter, dated the 10th June 1913, written by the respondents to the appellants. The letter, in our opinion, has no such effect; but we must not be taken to endorse the view that the respondents could deprive themselves of their right of suit by their own acts, a position which may be difficult to reconcile with the view taken by Fletcher-Moulton, L. J., namely, that as soon as a suit is instituted the private tribunal becomes functus officio. Our conclusion, therefore, is that the view taken by Mr. Justice Greaves is right and that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

FLETCHER, J.—I agree.

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Transfer of Property Act IV of 1882, s. 53—Hindu Law—Joint family—Transfer of family property by one member to another—Decree against transferor—Property transferred, whether liable to attachment and sale—Execution of decree—Attachment of property—Claim based on transfer deed, failure of—Declaration, suit for—Decree holder, whether can plead that transfer fraudulent—Transfer, whether can be questioned by subsequent creditor.

Inasmuch as a transfer by one member of a joint undivided Hindu family of a portion of the joint family property to another member of the family is illegal, a suit by the transferee against the holder of a decree against the transferor for a declaration that the property so transferred is not liable to attachment and sale in execution of that decree, is not maintainable. [p 847, col. .]

Per Stuart, J.—When a decree-holder attaches property which he states to be the property of the judgment-debtor, and a third party objects that the property is not the property of the judgment-debtor, because it has been transferred by a good and valid deed, and is met with the reply that the deed is a fraudulent deed, and the Court in execution decides that the deed is a fraudulent deed and upholds the attachment, it is open to the decree-holder to plead, in a subsequent suit brought against him by that third party for a declaration that the deed is a valid deed, that the deed is fraudulent. It is not necessary, in such a case, for the decree-holder to bring a suit to declare the fraudulent nature of the transfer. [p 84, col. 1.]

Where a man makes a fraudulent transfer in order to evade his existing obligations, that transfer can be impeached by creditors whose obligations are of a later date [p. 848, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

RAFIQUE, J.—It appears that Maharaj Singh and his son, Ram Chandra alias Ratan Singh, were members of a joint undivided Hindu family and had some joint family property. During the time that the family was joint, a certain item of property was acquired by right of pre-emption. On the 27th of February 1903 Maharaj Singh executed a famliknama in favour of his son

RAM CHAND V. MATHURA CHAND.

Ram Chandra in respect of the said property. On the 12th of December 1914 Mathura Prasad and Parbhu Dayal obtained a decree for their share of profits in a certain village against Maharaj Singh. In execution of that decree they attached the property that had been conveyed by the tamliknama of the 27th of February 1903 to Ram Chandra, the son of Maharaj Singh. He objected to the attachment on the ground that the property attached belonged to him. The objection was disallowed on the 7th of July 1917. Thereupon the suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted by Ram Chandra against the decree-holders, Mathura Prasad and Parbhu Dayal, for a declaration that the property sought to be attached by them was not liable to attachment and sale in execution of their decree. The claim was resisted on various grounds. It was urged on behalf of the defence that the tamliknama relied upon by the plaintiff conveyed no title to him inasmuch as the property, the subject of the tamliknama, was part of the joint family property and the family being joint one member of it could not transfer any portion of the joint property to the other. Moreover, section 53 of Act IV of 1882 was also pleaded in bar of the claim. The Court of first instance dismissed the claim. On appeal the decree of the first Court was affirmed. In second appeal to this Court it is contended on behalf of Ram Chandra that the defence under section 53 of Act IV of 1882 is not open to the defendants, inasmuch as they did not bring, as they ought to have brought, a regular suit to have it declared that the tamliknama of the 27th of February 1903 was inoperative and not binding against the creditors of Maharaj Singh. This contention is based on the case of Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar (1). The contention for the plaintiff appellant is, no doubt, borne out by the case relied upon by him but it appears to me that, on the findings of the Courts below, this appeal can be disposed of without expressing an opinion on the question whether the defence under section 53 of Act IV of 1882 is open to the defendants in the present case. It has been found by the lower Appellate Court that Maharaj

Singh and Ramchandra were members of a joint undivided Hindu family at the time that the tamliknama was executed and that the property conveyed by the said deed was part of the joint family property. Under these circumstances, the deed of the 27th of February 1903 was an invalid deed that conveyed nothing to Ramchandra. A member of a joint undivided Hindu family cannot legally transfer a portion of the joint family property to another member of the family. The transfer being, therefore, merely a paper transaction, under which no interest passed to the transferee, the case relied upon by the learned Vakil for the plaintiff appellant is not in point. The plaintiff cannot, therefore, maintain the present suit on the basis of the deed of the 27th of February 1903. The conclusion arrived at by the lower Appellate Court, in my opinion, was a correct one and I would dismiss the appeal.

STUART, J.—While concurring with the decision of my learned colleague, that the finding to the effect that the property, which the tamliknama purported to transfer, was the joint property of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law, is fatal to the success of the appeal, I think it advisable to note a decision on two legal points, which have been argued by the learned Vakil for the appellant. The first point is this. He argued that, inasmuch as the debt due from Maharaj Singh which formed the basis of the simple money-decree against him had not been incurred (and could not necessarily have been incurred) at the time that the tamliknama of the 27th of February 1903 was executed, the provisions of section 53 of Act IV of 1882 had no application. His case here was, that the provisions of that section did not protect future creditors. It has usually been considered settled law that the provisions of that section do protect future creditors, but I have not been referred to any decision of this Court to support the proposition. There is, however, a decision of the Madras High Court in Thomas Tilley v. Muthurama Chettiar (2), which decides, that subsequent creditors are within the rule enunciated in the first clause of section 53 Act IV of 1882. The section in question reproduces the provisions of the Statute of Elizabeth, 13 Eliz. C. 5, and in the interpretation of the words of that section guidance may be sought from English decisions upon the subject. The Bench of the Madras High Court, which arrived at the decision that I have just quoted, have cited certain English cases in support of their decision. I add the dictum of Wood, V. C., in Holmes v. Penney (3): "Where, in order to evade the Statute, a person, being considerably indebted, makes a voluntary settlement, which would be void if impeached by those who were then his creditors, and afterwards pays them off, and a new set of creditors stand in their places. . . . such a settlement would be void against the subsequent creditors, because it would be a fraud upon the Statute." It is unnecessary to quote other authorities. As I understand it, the law is clear. Where a man makes a fraudulent transfer in order to evade his existing obligations, that transfer can be impeached by creditors whose obligations are of a later date.

The second point taken by the learned Vakil is this. A Full Bench case reported as Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar (1), lays down the proposition that, when a decree-holder attaches property which he states to be the property of the judgment debtor, and a third party pleads in execution that that property is not the property of the judgment-debtor, because it has been transferred by a good and valid deed, and is met with the reply that the deed is a fraudulent deed, and when the Court of execution decides that the deed is a fraudulent deed and upholds the attachment, it is not open to the decree-holder to plead, in a subsequent suit brought against him by that third party for a declaration, that the deed is a valid deed, that the deed is fraudulent, unless he has previously himself filed a suit for a declaration that the deed is fraudulent and obtained a decree. This is a decision of a very far-reaching nature. It decides finally a most important question of procedure. It drives such a decree-holder into Court to bring a regular suit, and deprives him of the right, which, at first sight, he would appear to have, to impeach the validity of a fraudulent document. It remains to be seen what arguments were advanced by the learned Judges of the Madras High Court who arrived at this conclusion.

The judgments are very short. Ayling, J., who gave the first decision, stated that he based it entirely upon a previous decision of a Bench of the Madras High Court. He recognised the fact that the view which he took was opposed to the view taken by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Abdul Kader v. Ali Meah (4). Seshagiri Aiyar, J., who had been a party to the previous decision on which Ayling, J., relied, stated that he saw no reason to change the view at which he had arrived in the former case. Bakewell, J., agreed. It is, therefore, necessary to examine the views taken by the learned Judges who decided the previous case. That case is reported as Palaniandi Chetti v. Appavu Chettiar (5). The facts closely resemble the facts in the appeal before us. A decree-holder attached certain property in execution of his decree; a third party came forward and claimed that property by virtue of a deed of transfer from the judgment debtor. The Court of execution found the deed of transfer to be void or voidable at the instance of the decree-holder. The attachment was upheld. The third party then brought a suit against the decree-holder for a declaration that the transfer was good. The learned Judges, who heard the appeal, decided that it was not open to the decree-holder as a defendant to challenge the validity of the deed. They held that, unless and until he had obtained a decree as plaintiff declaring the deed to be invalid, his mouth was closed, and that such a plea was not open to him.

Conlts-Trotter, J., (the learned Judge whose decision appears first in the report) stated that section 53 was a re-production of the Statute, 13 Eliz. C. 5, and that the English decisions on that Statute were authorities on the construction of the Indian section. I agree with that view. It appears to me that the next conclusion drawn by that Judge does not follow from the previous conclusion. The next conclusion is that, unless the English procedure permits the decree-holder to plead in subsequent proceedings that a transaction is fraudulent, he cannot be permitted to take such a plea in an Indian Court. For the interpretation of section 53 the Courts would undoubtedly go to the English authorities, as the section in effect contains the rule of law in England upon the point, but with regard to the question of procedure, it does not appear to me that the practice in England can bind Courts in India as the procedures in Courts in India and Courts in England are based upon different rules of practice and different enactments. Courts-Trotter, J., went carefully into the question whether such a decree-holder in England, as the decree holder in the case before him, could raise such a plea by way of a defense in a suit in which he was a defendant. He arrived at the conclusion that, in an English Court, he would not be permitted to raise such a plea. I need not discuss whether such a person in England could raise such a plea. The question which we have to decide is, whether he can raise such a plea in India, and it depends for its answer on a decision whether there is anything in the Civil Procedure Code or elsewhere which forbids him to take such an attitude. I have been unable to discover anything in the Civil Procedure Code, or any other law, which prevents such a person from taking such an attitude, and, in the circumstances, applying the general principles that Courts should not add anything to the existing law, and not narrow the door open to litigants, I decide that it was open to the respondents to take the position that they did. The decision of the other Judge, Seshagiri Aiyar, J., was to the same effect as the decision of Courts-Trotter, J. The view of the Madras High Court is opposed to the view taken by the High Court in Calcutta. In Abdul Kader v. Ali Meek (4) two learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court laid down that, in such circumstances, the decree holder could bring an independent suit himself, but that he could also do as a defendant what he could have done as a plaintiff. In Hen Ohandra Sarkar v. Lalit Mohan (6) a Bench of the Calcutta High Court arrived at the same principle in slightly different circumstances. That Bench laid down that, where a mortgage executed by a guardian legally appointed for a minor, was executed without the permission of the Court the mortgage was voidable at the instance of the minor. The decision proceeds that it is not necessary for the minor after attaining majority to set aside the transaction, but he may declare his will to rescind by way of defense in an action against him. The views taken in Calcutta appear to me to be based upon a correct construction of the law on the subject. I, therefore, consider that there is no force in either of the pleas raised by the learned Vakil for the appellant and concur in the order dismissing this appeal with costs.

By the Court.—The order of the Court is, that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

The High Court will not interfere in revision in a case in which the lower Court has exercised a judicial discretion in a proper manner. [p. 900, col. 2.]

Plaintiff applied to the Trial Court for permission to withdraw his suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit; the application was disallowed and the suit eventually dismissed. On appeal, the application was allowed and was also allowed on the ground, among others, that there was a formal defect in the framing of the issue.

But, the order was an undoubted exercise of judicial discretion by the Appellate Court, the High Court would not interfere. [p. 900, col. 2.]

Civil revision from an order of Additional Judge, Sabaranpur, dated the 30th May 1919.

Messrs. S. A. Haidar and Surendro Nath Sen, for the Appellants.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision against an order by which a Court of first appeal, setting aside the decree of the Trial Court dismissing the suit, substituted for that decree an order under Order XXII, rule 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure, permitting the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the subject matter of the same. The jurisdiction of an Appellate Court to pass such an order has not been challenged, at any rate since the decision of a Bench of this Court in the case of Afsul Begam v. Akbari Khanam (1). It is contended that the lower Appellate Court, in the present instance, acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally and with material irregularity, because it has not given any reasons for granting the plaintiff permission to withdraw, such as to satisfy the requirements of Order XXIII, rule 1, clause (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure. The case has been referred to a Bench of two Judges, because of a presumed conflict of authority as to the limits of the revisional jurisdiction of this Court in such a matter. If we confine our attention to cases decided by a Bench of two Judges, there are only three cases calling for notice. There are Radha Rawan v. Tula Ram (2), Afsul Begam v. Akbari Khanam (1) and Jhunku Lal v. Bisheshwar Das (3). These cases are not irreconcilable, and, in our opinion, they were all three rightly decided. The first lays down the proposition that, where in the judgment of a Subordinate Court there is nothing to show that that Court, when granting a plaintiff permission to withdraw from his suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit, applied its mind to the provisions of the Legislature on this point, or came to any judicial decision as to whether or not the plaintiff had made out an adequate case for the granting of such permission, this Court will interfere in revision.

It is worth noticing that in the case of Radha Rawan v. Tula Ram (2), this Court merely ordered the Court below to take the case back on to its register of pending cases and to dispose of it according to law. The order of this Court does not preclude the Court below, upon a proper application based upon valid grounds, from re-considering the question whether the plaintiff in that particular litigation ought or ought not to have been allowed the permission which he sought. The other two cases are authority for this proposition that, where a judicial discretion has been exercised, this Court will not interfere, merely on the ground that, had the matter come before this Court as a substantive application, or by way of appeal, it might not have taken the same view of the facts of the case in their application to the provisions of Order XXIII, rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure as commended itself to the Court below. Applying this proposition of law to the facts before us, we think that, in this case, the lower Appellate Court did apply its mind judicially to the question properly in issue before it. As a matter of fact, the plaintiff's application for leave to withdraw had been made in the first instance to the Trial Court and rejected by that Court, so that the Appellate Court, was re-considering a matter upon which the Trial Court had pronounced a judicial opinion. The learned District Judge has recorded his opinion that there was a formal defect in the frame of the suit, and that there were otherwise sufficient grounds in law for allowing the plaintiff to withdraw and to institute a fresh suit on the same subject matter. We think that, in this case, a judicial discretion was undoubtedly exercised and that it is not for us in revision to pursue the matter further. We dismiss this application with costs.

*Custom—Pre-emption—Agricultural land—Hindus of Surat—Custom contrary to personal law, when to be

By a long established custom Hindus in Surat have adopted the Muhammadan law of Pre-emption with regard to houses, but it is doubtful whether they have adopted any law which gives a right of pre-emption with regard to agricultural lands.

It is not advisable to extend any customary law which is in conflict with the personal law of the parties, unless there is evidence that such alien law has been adopted.

Cross-appeals from the decision of the Joint First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P., at Surat, in Appeal No. 50 of 1917, reversing the decrees passed by, and remanding the suit to the Subordinate Judge at Surat, in Civil Suit No 58 of 1916

Messrs. M. H. Mehta and M. R. Vidyarthi, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. M. B. Dave, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was entitled to a right of pre-emption in reference to the plaintiff-land, which admittedly was agricultural land. In the Trial Court the second issue was: "Has plaintiff the right of pre-emption with respect to the land in suit whether according to law or to any local custom." The third issue was: "Does defendant show that the right of pre-emption does not extend to or cannot be exercised in respect of agricultural land?" That issue was founded on the contention in the defendants' written statement that the right of pre-emption did not extend to agricultural lands. The Trial Court dismissed the suit, finding Issues Nos. 2 and 3 in the negative. In appeal this decree was set aside and the case was remanded for disposal on the merits after substituting this issue: "Does plaintiff prove the existence of an ancient and invariable custom of pre-emption among Hindus of the Surat District in respect of agricultural lands." for the original Issues Nos. 2 and 3. I think it can no longer be doubted that this Court has recognised that Hindus in Surat have adopted the Muhammadan Law of Pre-emption by a long established custom with regard to houses. The only cases which have come before the Courts either from the District of Surat or from other Districts of Gujarat have related to houses, and it must be certainly an open question whether Hindus have adopted any law which gives a right of pre-emption with regard to agricultural lands. It even seems doubtful, from the authorities on Muhammadan Law, whether Muhammadans themselves recognised the right of Muhammadans to pre-emption with regard to agricultural lands. However that may be, it is quite possible that, even assuming the Muhammadans themselves recognised that right, Hindus from the District of Surat recognised that the right of pre-emption, as far as they were concerned, should be confined to pre-emption of houses and it may well have been, considering the uncertainty of Muhammadan Law, they did not adopt any such law with regard to agricultural land.

It is certainly not advisable, in my opinion, to extend any customary law which is in conflict with the personal law of the parties unless there is evidence that such alien law has been adopted and it is certainly desirable and right that the issue set out by the learned Appellate Judge should be tried.

I think, therefore, both the appeals fail and should be dismissed with costs.

Plaintiff's application for appointment of a Receiver of the property of the defendant, who is a minor, and for the appointment of a Receiver of the property of the defendant, who is a minor, and for the appointment of a Receiver of the property of the defendant, who is a minor.

MOHAMMAD ASKARI v. NISAR HUSAIN.

Where a person is in possession of trust property as manager on behalf of the trust, the mere fact that he is a poor man from whom probably a decree for mesne profits, in the event of such a decree being passed, might prove difficult of realisation, is not an adequate reason for displacing him by the appointment of a Receiver, especially where there is no allegation of waste or misappropriation. [p. 903, col. 1.]

Where in connection with an application for the appointment of a Receiver of trust property by dispossessing the manager of the trustees, the latter's objection to such an appointment is disallowed and the Court proceeds to appoint a Receiver, the mere fact that he suggested the name of a person to be so appointed, would not preclude him from questioning the appointment on appeal. [p. 902, col. 2.]

First appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge, Basti, dated the 4th of February 1920.

Mr. S. Agha Haider, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises relates to property in the Basti District belonging to a lady, named Ashrafunnisa, who died on the 18th of May 1917, possessed of immoveable property of considerable value, not only in the Basti District but also in the Gonda District of Oudh. Admittedly, the said lady had been on bad terms with her brother, Ata Husain, and there had been previous litigation between them in the Oudh Courts. On the 28th of April 1917, it is alleged that Musummat Ashrafunnisa had executed a deed of endowment, settling the whole of her immoveable property on certain trustees for certain specific purposes. On her death a dispute broke out between the present respondents and the appellant, Mohammed Askari a former general attorney of the deceased lady, who was named the principal trustee in the deed of endowment. The question of possession over the estate of the deceased lady was fought out in the first instance upon applications for mutation of names in the Revenue Courts both of the Gonda and Basti Districts. In the result Mohammed Askari obtained possession as the manager on behalf of the trust. The present suit was brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Basti and the presentation of the plaint was accompanied by an application for the appointment of a Receiver. This application was supported by a very brief affidavit. The statements made in this affidavit are, that the income of the property in suit is very considerable; that

Mohammed Askari himself is a poor man, possessed of little or no immoveable property, and that, in the event of their succeeding in their suit, the plaintiffs, who claim as heirs-at-law of Musummat Ashrafunnisa, would find it difficult to realise from Mohammed Askari any decree for mesne profits which might be passed in their favour. On the basis of this affidavit, the Trial Court passed an order on the 15th of March 1919, stating that it proposed to appoint a Receiver, and called on the parties to suggest the names of suitable persons to take charge of the property in suit in that capacity. Mohammed Askari appealed to this Court against that order, but his appeal failed upon a finding that it was premature, inasmuch as a right of appeal only accrued to him upon the actual appointment of a Receiver. The case then went back to the Trial Court and it is not denied that Mohammed Askari himself suggested to the Court that, if a Receiver were to be appointed, the Deputy Commissioner of Gonda, in his official capacity, would be the most suitable person for such appointment. The Court accordingly passed an order formally appointing the Deputy Commissioner of Gonda to take charge of the property in suit as Receiver and the appeal before us is against this order. It is not denied that an appeal lies. A suggestion has been thrown out that Mohammed Askari is precluded from maintaining this appeal, by reason of the fact that he had himself suggested the Deputy Commissioner of Gonda as a suitable Receiver. Under the circumstances which have already been set forth in this order, we think it clear that Mohammed Askari is entitled to maintain this appeal. He has all along protested that no case was made out for the appointment of a Receiver; that it was neither just nor convenient to any one that the management of the trust property by the trustees should be interrupted, merely by the institution of a claim against the said property. He only suggested the Deputy Commissioner of Gonda as a suitable person to take charge of the property as Receiver, if the Court was bent on appointing one. It would be most unjust, more particularly in view of this Court's order dismissing his previous appeal, to hold that he is precluded from maintaining the present one merely because, when the appointment of a Receiver became inevitable, he exerted himself to secure the appointment of a suitable person. On the merits there is very little to be said. The case for the appellant simply is, that the Court below had before it no materials such as to justify the appointment of a Receiver. The allegation that the trustee in actual possession of the property in situ as manager is himself a poor man, from whom personally a decree for mesne profits in the event of such a decree being passed might prove difficult of realisation, is not an adequate reason for passing the order under appeal. The Trial Court, if it thought that steps were necessary to safeguard the interests of the parties pendente lite, might have taken upon itself to enquire into such matters as the income of the trust property and the expenses necessarily involved in the immediate carrying out of the objects prescribed for the trust. It is quite possible that, if this had been done, the Court might, with the consent of the defendants to the suit, who are the entire body of trustees, have made arrangements for the submission of accounts pendente lite and the deposit of surplus profits in such a manner as fully to safeguard the plaintiffs in the event of their success. The principles which should govern the action of the Courts in the matter of the appointment of a Receiver were laid down long ago in the case of Srimati Prosonomoyi Devi v. Beni Madhab (1). We are in full agreement with what is there stated as to the need for careful enquiry and the exercise of due caution before a Trial Court passes an order appointing a Receiver, the effect of which is to dispossess the person or persons for the time being in the enjoyment of immoveable property. It has not been alleged in this case against Mohammed Askari personally, or any of the trustees, that he or they are wasting the corpus of the property, and the Court below had before it no allegation that the trustee, or any of them, were misappropriating the income of the property for purposes other than those laid down in the trust deed. On this state of facts, it seems to us that the order under appeal cannot be maintained. We are naturally reluctant to interfere with the exercise of discretion in such a matter on the part of a Trial Court, more especially after a Government official has been appointed trustee and has presumably taken charge of the property, but we do not find it possible to uphold the order of the Court below in this case. The result is, that this appeal succeeds, and we set aside the order appointing the Deputy Commissioner of Gonda to take charge of the property in suit as trustee. The Court below will replace the defendants, the trustees under the deed of April 28th, 1917 in such possession as they were previously enjoying. There is nothing, however, to prevent the Court from receiving accounts from the Deputy Commissioner of Gonda regarding his period of management and passing suitable orders as to the disposal of any balance which might have accumulated to the credit of the estate during this period of management. We allow the appellant his costs of this proceeding, here and in the Court below.

(1) 5 A. 556; A. W. N. (1883) 136; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 511.

PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act IX of 1908, Sch. I, Arts 120, 132—Mortgage, payment of principal—Subsequent mortgage, invalid—Charge, whether created—Declaration of charge, suit for—Limitation.

Plaintiff lent defendant a sum of money to enable the latter to pay off a mortgage on his property. Defendant executed a mortgage in favour of the plaintiff for the amount of the sum lent which was, however, invalid for want of due attestation:

Held, (1) that the plaintiff was entitled to a declaration that he had a charge upon the property to the extent of the money advanced by him; [p. 904, col. 2.]

(2) that the limitation for a suit to declare the charge was provided in Article 120 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act and began to run from the date on which the money was advanced. [p. 905, col. 1.]

Article 32 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act applies only to a suit brought to enforce a charge in existence and recognised at the date of the suit. [p. 905, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Thana, in Appeal No. 27 of 1916, reversing the decree passed by the CHHOTALAL KARSANDAS V. VISHNU GANESH GOXHALE.

Subordinate Judge at Bassein, in Civil Suit No. 143 of 1914.

Mr. Jayakar (with him Mr. W. B. Pradhan), for the Appellant.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for respondents Nos. 1 to 3.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued to recover the sum of Rs. 3,553-11-0 and costs with future interest by sale of the mortgaged property.

The mortgage is dated 30th of November 1902. It is common ground that the mortgage-deed was not properly attested, and, therefore, the suit on the mortgage must fail. The plaint was allowed to be amended so as to enable the plaintiffs to ask the Court to declare that they were entitled to subrogate and fall back upon the previous deed of the 29th December 1887, and that the claim on that deed was not time-barred as it was acknowledged in the deed of 1902, the Satekhat of 22nd August 1901, and also the Vasul mentioned in the plaint.

The facts of the case are simple. In 1887 the mortgage of the plaint-property was executed in favour of four brothers. In 1901, the four brothers partitioned and they were paid off on the day that the last payment was made on account of the mortgage. Ganesh, the son of one of the mortgagees, agreed to pay the mortgagor Rs. 4,000, and we may take it as admitted that Ganesh paid Rs. 4,000 to enable the mortgagor to pay what was required to make the last payment on account of the mortgage of 1887. No doubt, it was intended that Ganesh should get a mortgage of the property to secure the re-payment of the Rs. 4,000 and the parties thought that they had executed a deed of mortgage for that amount in November 1902. That mortgage not having been executed in accordance with law must be ruled out of consideration altogether.

Then the question arises, what is the position of the plaintiff who had, on the 22nd August 1901, advanced the sum of Rs. 4,000 to enable the mortgagor to pay off the mortgage on the understanding that a further mortgage would be executed by the mortgagor? I do not think that there will be the slightest doubt that, though Ganesh had no legal title to the plaint-property, he had a right to get a mortgage or to be placed in the same position as the previous mortgagee, and that right would be recognized if he came to a Court of Equity.

It may be said that, in India there is no distinction between law and equity, but that makes no difference on a question of this kind, except that it only necessitates a little change in phraseology, and it may be said that Ganesh had no right in law to be considered as having any interest in this property until he came to a Court of law, which administers doctrines of equity, to have his right established. That makes little difference where it can be said that Ganesh can ask the Court for a declaration that he is entitled to a charge on the property to the extent of the money advanced, or that he is entitled to be put in the same position as the mortgagees who have been paid off with his money. We have been referred to the case of Bu'ler v. Rice (1) where Warrington, J., at page 282 says: "The statement of claim proceeds on the well-known equitable doctrine that, if a stranger pays off a mortgage on an estate he presumably does not intend to discharge that mortgage, but to keep it alive for his own benefit. The statement of claim asks for a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to a charge on the Manor Road property for £150 and interest." And, again, at page 283: "The plaintiff did not know there was any other property; he intended to keep alive the security on the Manor Road property, and that intention was not affected by the fact that the Bank also held another security. He is entitled to a declaration that he has a right to a charge on the Manor Road property for £150 and interest at 5 per cent., that being the rate of interest charged by the Bank, and to have his security enforced by the usual foreclosure judgment in the case of an equitable mortgage."

Now, there is no doubt that the payment in 1901 created a set of circumstances which enabled the person who paid the money to establish his right to a charge. But with regard to the property sold, the mere payment would not give the person who paid it any right against the property, either to go into possession or to sell it. It would only give him a right to ask the Court to come to his assistance, on the ground that the facts which he relied upon created a charge. I think, therefore, the question of limitation in this case is one of primary importance. This is not the case of a party coming into Court to enforce a charge by a suit, which is provided for by Article 132 of the Indian Limitation Act, which only relates to a suit brought to enforce a charge in existence and recognised at the date of the suit.

I cannot agree with the learned Pleader for the respondent when he says that, in a suit of this kind, it is not necessary that the plaintiff should ask for a declaration. That declaration has to be made before the Court can exercise its jurisdiction over the property in suit. Otherwise, the plaintiff can only be considered as a simple creditor who has made a payment to his debtor for a particular purpose.

An equitable mortgagee has a lien or interest in the property. He has possession of the title-deeds, but cannot go into possession, and he cannot assert the right to sell the property unless he comes to a Court and gets a declaratory decree that he is entitled to a charge on the property. It appears to me that the only Article in the Indian Limitation Act which can apply to a suit of this nature is Article 120. Therefore, the plaintiff is barred unless he filed his suit within 6 years of the payment of the Rs. 4,000. Even if the period is twelve years, the plaintiff would be no better off, because the suit was filed in 1914. I think the Trial Judge has taken the right view, when he says at paragraph 29 of the judgment:—"The question thus arises whether the plaintiff's claim on the lien thus created by law is in time. The charge was created on the date of payment, 22nd or 23rd August 1901. The suit is filed on 19th November 1914 and thus the point is, if there are acknowledgments of such part payments or payments of interest as would extend the period of limitation. Payments are not relied upon."

Thus, it is found that there was nothing after the 23rd August 1901 which would start a new period of limitation running. The plaintiff's claim is, therefore, barred by limitation. The result is, that the appeal is allowed and the suit dismissed. There will be no order as to costs.

Where in execution of a decree property is sold, but the auction-purchaser is resisted in taking possession by a third party who claims the property as his, and the Court, after investigation, refuses to put the auction-purchaser in possession, the auction-purchaser's remedy is to institute a suit to establish his right to possession of the property, within the period prescribed by Article 11A of Schedule I to the Limitation Act [n. 906, cols 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.—The father of the plaintiff in this case held a decree against one Mazhar Husain, in execution of which he brought to sale, as the property of his judgment debtor, one entire house, and himself purchased it at auction on the 25th of February 1905. On attempting to take possession he was resisted by Musammât Iehrat Begam, one of the sisters of Mazhar Husain, who claimed the entire house as her own property. He asked for the assistance of the Court, but after an investigation of his claim the Court refused to put him in possession. The present suit was instituted on the 26th of February 1917, apparently on the last possible day of limitation, assuming that the plaintiff was entitled to bring his suit within twelve years of the date of the auction-purchase. The plaint is wholly silent as to the attempt made to obtain possession through the Court in the year 1906. On the face of it, it is a suit upon title, claiming possession by purchase of a 2/5th share in the house as the property of Mazhar Husain acquired by the plaintiff's father on the 25th of February 1905. There was a long list of defendants, including the heirs of

GANPAT RAI v. HUSAINI BEGAM.

Mazhar Husain and the heirs of his sisters. The suit was resisted by the latter and the main defense set up was one of limitation. This plea involved two distinct points. It was pleaded that Musammât Ishrat Begam, whatever her title to the house in question, had been in proprietary and adverse possession of the same for a long period and had, in fact, perfected a good title by prescription as against Mazhar Husain, even before the date of the auction-sale. Secondly, the plea taken was with reference to Article 11 A of the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, No. IX of 1908, the point being that the suit should have been brought within one year of the adverse decision of the Execution Court which was dated the 21st of July 1906. The Courts below have dealt with this latter point only. Both Courts have held that the suit is barred under the Article above mentioned. We have before us a second appeal by the plaintiff. The real question is, whether the present suit is or is not one to establish the right to present possession of the property comprised in the order of the 21st of July 1906, claimed in that year by the plaintiff's father. The Court of first instance has relied upon a decision of the Bombay High Court, in the case of Bhimappa v. Irappa (1), in which a somewhat similar attempt by a plaintiff to get round the provisions of the Limitation Act was defeated. The case is not entirely on all fours with the present. Indeed, it is obvious that each case of this sort will require to be judged with reference to its own facts. As put before us in argument, the plaintiff's case is that he is not really attacking the decision of July the 21st 1906, but is acquiescing in that decision, inasmuch as he admits that Mazhar Husain was, on the date of the auction sale, the owner of a  $\frac{2}{5}$ th share only in the house in question. He asks us to interpret the decision of the Execution Court as merely affirming the right of Musammât Ishrat Begam to some undivided share in the house. Hence, he claims that the provisions of Article 11 A of the Schedule to the Limitation Act have no bearing on the facts of this case, and that he retained his right to sue upon the title acquired by his father on the date of the auction-purchase. A good deal necessarily depends on the interpretation put upon the Execution Court's order of July 21st 1906. On the whole, we think that the Courts below have proceeded upon a common sense view of the facts and that their decision is a sound one. In 1906 the plaintiff's father claimed the entire house on the strength of the title derived by him at an auction-sale, at which the house had been sold as the property of Mazhar Husain. He now says that he is prepared to admit that Mazhar Husain was the owner of a  $\frac{2}{5}$ th share only in the house and he asks the Court to separate that share by metes and bounds from the rest of the house and to give him possession over the same. On the principle that the greater includes the less, it seems reasonable to hold that the right now claimed to present possession over a portion of the house is included in the right claimed in the year 1906 to present possession over the entire house, so as to bring into operation the provisions of Article 11 A of the Limitation Act Schedule. It must be remembered that the plaintiff's father had been met by a claim to the entire house on the part of Musammât Ishrat Begam and not merely to a portion of the same. It is not possible to say with certainty on what precise ground the Execution Court's decision of July 21st, 1906, is to be taken to have proceeded. The broad fact remains that the Court recorded its opinion that the auction-purchaser had failed to make out an adequate case in support of this claim and was not entitled to the assistance of the Court by way of delivery of possession under section 345 of the former Code of Civil Procedure. The order very definitely refers the auction-purchaser to his remedy by way of a regular suit. On the face of the record, there seems something fishy about this claim, held up for such a long period of years after the adverse decision of July 1906 and finally preferred on what, according to the plaintiff himself, was the last possible day of limitation. For these reasons, we think that the decision of the Courts below was correct and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Plaintiff sued for a declaration that he, as Jagadguru, was entitled to be carried in procession through the public streets in a cross-palanquin on certain occasions, and for an injunction restraining the defendant from obstructing him in the exercise of that right:

Held, that the suit was not maintainable. [p. 908, col. 2.]

To decide disputes as to precedence or privilege between purely religious functionaries is no part of the business of the Civil Courts. [p. 909, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff alleges that he is one of the Jagadgurus of the Lingayats that he has many branch Maths in the Presidencies of Bombay and Madras, in the territories of the Patwardhan Chiefs and of His Exalted Highness the Nizam; that plaintiff's Gurus before him had and plaintiff has the right of going in procession seated in a cross palanquin adorned with and accompanied by Panch-Kalash and Birudavali; that they had and have that right as Jagadguru; that they have a right that their disciples should show them that honour in their own village and also when they go out visiting in public streets; that the plaintiff's Gurus had and plaintiff has exercised this their right since ancient times; that this procession in a cross-palanquin is taken out in plaintiff's village Mondarigi every year on Vaishak Sud 10 and 11, last Monday and Tuesday in every Shrawana, on Ashwin Sud 10 and at the beginning of Margashirsha without fail. It is taken out also when plaintiff is called by his disciples for worshipping his feet at their homes at all times of the year, it is taken out also when the plaintiff enters villages on his tours and visits his disciples' houses for the worshipping of his feet, that the plaintiff intended to take out a cross palanquin procession on last Monday Shrawana of Shaka 1834, that the 1st defendant induced defendant No. 2 to make an application to the 2nd Class Magistrate of Mondarigi on the 6th of September 1912 and the other defendants to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate that there would be a breach of the peace; that the latter Magistrate stopped the plaintiff's procession on the 9th of September 1912, and that appeals were preferred, but failed and hence the suit. The plaintiff prays for an injunction against the defendants that they should not obstruct the plaintiff in going in a cross palanquin procession with a Panch-Kalash and Birudavali on Vaishak Sud 10 and 11, on last Monday and Tuesday in Shrawana, on Ashwin Sud 10 and in the beginning of Margashirsha in Mondarigi and elsewhere at other times.

The defendants Nos. 1 and 3 contend that the Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to try this suit, that the plaintiff is not a Jagadguru but defendant No. 1's disciple; that disciples before him called Andanmari, like the plaintiff, denied that they were defendant No. 1's disciples (Shishyas) and the High Court held that they were defendant No. 1's Shishyas or disciples; that the Andanmari before the plaintiff had admitted that he was defendant No. 1's disciple and had passed a registered deed to that effect that such Maris have no such right of going in a cross palanquin as claimed in the plaint, that they have no right to take out the procession mentioned in the Schedule attached to the plaint, and that the 1st defendant alone has the right to call himself Jagadguru and go in a cross-palanquin with Panch-Kalash and Birudavali and not the plaintiff.

It may be said, therefore, on these pleadings that the plaintiff claimed to have the right of being carried in a cross palanquin in procession as Jagadguru. That was a right of dignity and privilege not for every member of the public, but for himself as

Jagadguru. It was the plaintiff who claimed to be carried in procession by his disciples in order that they might worship his feet in their homes, and to be carried in procession on particular days of the year.

The first issue raised in the Trial Court was: Is the right to parade in the cross-palanquin as described in the plaint a general right exercisable by any subject of His Majesty? It is difficult to see at first sight how that issue came to be raised. Certainly, it is not relevant to the pleadings. But when issues are raised under Order X.V, rule 1 (5), the Court shall, after reading the plaint and the written statement, if any, and after such examination of the parties as may appear necessary, ascertain upon what material proposition of fact or of law the parties are at variance and shall thereupon proceed to frame and record the issues on which the right decision of the case appears to depend. It appears from the record that the plaintiff never attended the Court and, therefore, he could not have been examined by the Judge. It seems obvious that the plaintiff's Pleader must have seen the danger he was in of losing his case, as he insisted upon plaintiff's claiming the privilege of being carried in a cross-palanquin for himself only as Jagadguru. He must have argued before the Court that the plaintiff's suit could succeed because he, as a member of the public, had the right to use the road in any way he pleased provided he did not inconvenience the other members of the public who had equal rights themselves. But it appears to me that this issue ought never to have been admitted. It is absolutely inconsistent with the plaintiff's own case and I cannot imagine that a party in the position of the plaintiff would ever have filed this suit claiming the right to be carried in procession in a cross-palanquin not because he was a Jagadguru, but because he was a member of the public. In Mahomed Buksh Khan v. Hosseini Bibi (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council dealt with the question of raising issues inconsistent with the case made out by the plaintiff. Their Lordships at page 86 said: "On the 16th of March 1882 issues were settled. Amongst the issues was this: '2nd. Whether the Hibbanama on behalf of Shahzadi Bibi is genuine and valid and executed with her knowledge and consent, or whether it was manufactured without her knowledge and consent, or whether it was executed under undue influence?' In their Lordships' opinion the latter part of that issue ought not to have been admitted. It was absolutely inconsistent with the case made by plaintiff. It only becomes possible, on the assumption that the alleged cause of action is unfounded. There was another issue which also was only admissible, on that assumption, namely: '3rd. Whether in case the said Hibbanama is proved to be genuine it is invalid on any ground according to Muhammadan Law?'" Applying those remarks to this case, this issue only becomes possible on the assumption that the alleged cause of action in the plaint is unfounded, namely, plaintiff's claim that he as Jagadguru was entitled to be carried in procession in a cross-palanquin as a religious dignity and privilege. That cause of action disappears entirely if the plaintiff were to allege that he was entitled to be carried in that way, not because he was a Jagadguru, but because he happened to be a member of the public entitled to use the street in any reasonable way. The suit was dismissed by the Trial Court as it found on the second issue that this was a special right enjoyable by the defendant No. 1 and other high priests of the Hindus like him, that the plaintiff had no right to ride in a procession seated in a cross palanquin as alleged in the plaint in public streets, and that the first defendant had an exclusive right of riding in a cross palanquin as against the plaintiff. But the lower Court also held that it had no jurisdiction to try the suit. The learned Judge said: "I shall examine whether a suit for this honour and dignity, unaccompanied by any pecuniary profits and not attached to any particular office, shall lie in a Civil Court under section 9 of the Civil Procedure Code. I think that suits for an office are of a civil nature, but, in my opinion, a suit for vindication for a mere dignity, though connected with an office, is not. The present suit is not for a claim to an office, but for a claim to a mere honour and dignity on account of an office and is, I think, not maintainable in a Civil Court. It has been held that the claim by a Swami or arch-priest that he is entitled to be carried on a high road in a cross-palanquin will not be entertained by a Civil Court. What is claimed in such a suit is a mere honour and dignity, a mark attached to the office of a Swami. It has been laid down that Civil Courts should discourage, as far as possible, claims of so unsubstantial and objectionable a nature and they ought not to be involved in the determination of trivial questions of dignity and privilege although connected with an office." Reference was made to Sri Sunkur Bharti Swami v. Sidha Lingayah Oharanti (2). In first appeal the learned Judge said: "In considering the authorities the right claimed by the appellant may be regarded in two aspects, first, as a religious dignity and privilege, and secondly, as a right to take a procession through public streets. From either point of view the current of Bombay decisions is against the appellant. In Madhusudan Parvat v. Shree Madhav Teerth (3) it has been held that 'to decide disputes as to precedence or privilege between purely religious functionaries is no part of the business of the Civil Courts, nor will they grant injunctions to prevent preachers from preaching where they like, under any title they please, provided no office or property is disturbed or interfered with.' In this case there is not the slightest suggestion that the appellant's office as the head of Mundarigi Math has in any way been affected." The learned Judge also referred to a Madras case—Sadagopachariar v. Rama Rao (4)—which was cited for the proposition that every member of the public and every sect has a right to use the public streets in a lawful manner. The learned Judge very rightly remarked that every sect may have the right to carry their leader in a cross-palanquin. The question is, whether the Court will enforce that right without proof of particular damage. It appears, therefore, to me that the authorities are perfectly clear. Civil Courts will not entertain a claim of this nature and, really, the argument that was addressed to us in second appeal was that we ought to deal with the case as if the plaintiff was suing as a member of the public claiming a such to be entitled to be carried in a cross-palanquin if he chose to adopt that method of procession. As I pointed out, that was not the plaintiff's case and I doubt whether, if we allowed the plaint to be amended, plaintiff would put his signature to such an amendment.

In my opinion, therefore, the appeal fails and the suit should be dismissed with costs.

F. W. C. J.—I agree.

D. entered into a contract with a firm LJ, for the purchase of 0 bales of dhotis, the contract having embodied in it a clause for arbitration in case of disputes. D sold the identical 30 bales to C. under a contract which was in the following terms:—"We sold the goods as were bought by us of Lakshmichand Jagannath, Batta allowance, chafage, all terms according to Bahar (importing) firms' godown due according to Bazar interest, coolie hire, according to Bhitor (Bazar)." ## JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Greaves, whereby he has refused to set aside an arbitration award. The events which led up to the award in question lie in a narrow compass and may be briefly recited.

On the 4th August 1918, the plaintiffs-appellants bought from the defendant-respondent 30 bales of dhotis. The defendant himself had purchased the goods from an importer, Lakshmi Chand Jagannath, under a contract, dated the 29th July 1918. The terms of the contract between the plaintiffs and the defendant were as follows:—"We sold the goods as were bought by us of Lakshmi Chand Jagannath, Batta (allowance), chutage, all terms according to Bahar (importing) firms, godown due according to Bazar interest, coolie hire, according to Bhitor (bazar). On the 7th January 1919, the defendant instituted a suit in this Court in respect of 27 out of the 30 bales on the allegation that the plaintiffs had wrongfully refused to accept delivery. On the 11th June 1919, the defendant referred to arbitration by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce a similar dispute in respect of the remaining three bales. On the 28th July 1919 an award was made in his favour and it was filed on the 12th August, 1919. The plaintiffs thereupon instituted the present proceedings and applied for cancellation of the award. Mr. Justice Greaves has refused the application. On the present appeal the validity of the award has been questioned on two grounds: first, that the arbitration clause embodied in the contract between the defendant and the importers was not incorporated into the contract between the plaintiffs and the defendant, and, secondly, that even if the arbitration clause be deemed to have been incorporated, the defendant, by reason of the institution of the suit in respect of 27 bales, was not competent to make a reference to arbitration with regard to the three remaining bales. In our opinion, both these contentions are well founded and the award must be set aside, as made without jurisdiction.

As regards the first point, we have to consider the terms of the arbitration clause contained in the contract between the defendant and the importers. The fourth clause of that contract was in these terms: "Any dispute or claim under this contract is to be settled by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce or, at the option of the seller, by two merchants on the 'Bengal Chamber's list, one to be chosen by each party." Now, if we read the contract between the plaintiffs and the defendant, as also the contract between the defendant and the importers, it is impossible to hold that the arbitration clause contained in the latter has become incorporated in the former by virtue of the expression "all terms according to the importing firm." Reliance has been placed by the appellants upon the decision of the House of Lords in the case of Thomas & Co. Limited v. Portsea Steamship Company, Limited (1), where the decision of the Court of Appeal in Hamilton & Co. v. Mackie & Sons (2) was approved. In the latter case, a bill of lading contained the words "all other terms and conditions as per Charter-party" and the Charter-party contained an arbitration clause. In an action by the ship-owners against the consignees of the cargo and the endorsees of the bill of lading, the Court refused a stay, on the ground that the arbitration clause in the Charter-party was not incorporated in the bill of lading. Lord Esher, M. R., said that where in a bill of lading there was such a condition as "all other conditions as per Charter-party," the conditions of the Charter-party must be read verbatim into the bill of lading, as though they were there in extenso. Then, if it was that any one of the conditions of the Charter-party on being so read, was inconsistent with the bill of lading, they were insensible and must be disregarded. The arbitration clause referred to disputes arising not under the bill of lading but under the Charter party. The condition was, therefore, insensible and had no application to the dispute which arose under the bill of lading. This view was approved by the House of Lords. Reference, however, was made on behalf of the respondent to the decision of the Court of Appeal in the case of Temperley Steam Shipping Co. v. Smyth and Co. (3). That case, in our opinion, is clearly distinguishable. The arbitration clause in that case, contained in a Charter-party, was held to apply to a dispute as to delay in the unloading of a ship after the completion of the loading, notwithstanding that the Charter-party contained the usual cesser clause, providing that the Charter's liability should cease upon the shipment of the cargo. The bill of lading, however, incorporated "all the terms and exceptions," contained in the Charter-party and gave the owner or master a lien on the cargo, inter alia, for demurrage. But the fundamental point in that case was, that the parties to the bill of lading and the Charter-party were the same. In the case before us, the first contract is between the defendant and the importers and the second between the defendant and his purchasers. The clause sought to be incorporated clearly refers to a dispute or claim "under this contract," that is, the contract between the defendant and the importers, and if that clause were incorporated into the contract between the plaintiffs and the defendant, the result would be, that, to use the language of Lord Esher, the contract would be insensible. We must hold, accordingly, that the arbitration clause was not incorporated into the contract between the plaintiffs and the defendant, and the reference to arbitration was completely ultra vires.

As regards the second point, we have to examine the effect of the twelfth clause of the contract between the defendant and the importers, assuming that the clause was incorporated by reference in the contract between the plaintiffs and the defendant. The clause was in these terms: "this agreement is to be deemed and construed as a separate contract in respect of each instalment of goods, and the rights and liabilities of the sellers and buyers respectively shall be the same as though a separate contract had been made out and signed in respect of each instalment." Now, the goods, under the contract between the plaintiffs and the defendant, were to be delivered according to "shipments May and June." Presumably, in the absence of an indication to the contrary [Bilwiram Thakurdas v. Ezekiel Abraham Gubbay (4)] the goods were to be delivered in two equal instalments of 15 bales each. Consequently, when the defendant instituted a suit with regard to 27 bales, he must be deemed to have sued in respect of the first instalment and a portion of the second instalment. Now, although the defendant might be at liberty [Dinabandhu Jana v. Durga Prasad Jana (5)] to resile from the arbitration clause (assuming the same to have been incorporated into the contract between himself and the plaintiffs) and to have recourse to a suit in respect of either instalment (treated as the subject-matter of a separate contract), he could not, in respect of one portion of an instalment, institute a suit, and, in respect of the remaining portion of that very instalment, take recourse to arbitration. When he instituted the suit for the 27 bales, he made his election with regard to not only the first, but also the second instalment; he cannot now be permitted to resile from the position deliberately taken up by him and to fall back upon the arbitration clause in respect of the remaining 3 bales. We cannot, in this connection, overlook the significant fact that, in his suit, the defendant has obtained leave under Order II, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure, reserving his right against his adversaries in respect of these 3 bales, and has asked for liberty to add to his claim for the 27 bales such sum as he may be entitled to recover on account of the 3 bales. In these circumstances, the conclusion is inevitable that he was not competent to make a reference to arbitration, even if the arbitration clause be deemed to have been incorporated in his contract with the plaintiffs.

The conclusion follows, that the arbitration

Where by a vakalatnama the plaintiffs jointly agree to be bound by all acts of their Pleader in the course of their suit, and they further expressly specify, amongst the acts which the said Pleader might perform on their behalf, the presentation to the Court of petitions relinquishing the claim, compromising the suit and withdrawing from the suit, and the Pleader presents a compromise, and expresses, on behalf of his clients, agreement to its terms, the plaintiffs cannot question his act and are bound thereby.

Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Muttra, dated the 3rd of January 1920.

The Hon'ble Mr. Narain Prasad Asthana, for the Appellants.

Mr. Tanna Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which this appeal arises there were five plaintiffs and two defendants. At a time when all the five plaintiffs were represented by a single Vakil, a compromise was arranged disposing of the suit on certain terms. This compromise was presented to the Court and verified before it by three plaintiffs in person, by both the defendants in person and by the Pleader, who held a power of attorney on behalf of all the five plaintiffs jointly. At a later date, the two plaintiffs who had not personally signed or presented to the Court the petition of compromise, protested that they had not authorised the Pleader to enter into the same and were not bound by the terms of the compromise, or by the action of their Pleader in presenting the same to the Court. The Court of first instance, overruled this contention and passed a decree in terms of the compromise. The lower Appellate Court has set aside this decision and remanded the suit to the Court of first instance for trial on the merits. The appeal before us is against this order of remand. In accordance with the principles laid down by a Full Bench of this Court, in the case of Jang Bahadur Singh v. Shankar Rai (1), the question must be decided entirely with reference to the terms of the vakalatnama held by the Pleader in question. Other decisions on the question of principle, such, for instance, the case of Jagapati Mutaliar v. Ekambara Mudaliar (2), are irrelevant. By the vakalatnama the plaintiffs jointly agreed that they would be bound by all acts of their Pleader in the course of their suit, and they further expressly specified, amongst the acts which the said Pleader might perform on their behalf, the presentation to the Court of petitions relinquishing the claim, compromising the suit or withdrawing from the suit. The actual words in the vakalatnama are:—"ya bazdawa ya sulehnama ya dastbardari dakhil karen." We find it a little difficult to understand what the learned Subordinate Judge means by saying that these words authorise the Pleader to file a compromise and not to make a compromise. The question for determination is, whether all the plaintiffs, including the two who subsequently called in question the authority of the Pleader, are or are not bound by his act in presenting this petition of compromise to the Court and expressing on their behalf agreement to its terms. We think they are so bound. The order under appeal is accordingly set aside and the decree of the Court of first instance restored, with costs to the appellants in this and in the lower Appellate Court.

DEFENDANT RESPONDENT

Landlord and tenant—Tenant, whether can acquire miras rights by adverse possession—Mortgage—Tenant, possession of, whether can be adverse against landlord during continuance of mortgage,

A tenant can set up against his landlord a claim to hold under more favourable terms of tenancy than those which the landlord is prepared to concede, and he can acquire such rights by prescription. [p. 913, col. 1]

Where, however, the landlord has mortgaged his interest in the land, the possession of the tenant cannot be adverse to the landlord till the mortgage is redeemed. [p. 914, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Satara, in Appeal No. 66 of 1918, reversing the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Karad, in Civil Suit No. 215 of 1916.

Mr. Jayakar (with him Mr. P. B. Shingne), for the Appellant.

Mr. K. N. Koya'ee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff sued to eject the defendant, to recover possession of the plaint land and for arrears of rent. The defendant claimed that the plaint land belonged to his family from ancient time, by Miras rights. The land originally belonged to one Balaji, who mortgaged it to Shiralkar. The plaintiff purchased the equity of redemption of Balaji on the 18th of October 1910, and acquired the interest of the mortgagee Shiralkar by an award decree in Original Suit No. 636 of 1911. He thereby became full owner of the plaint-land. The defendant claimed that he had become entitled to Miras rights in the land by adverse possession. Undoubtedly, a tenant can set up against his landlord a claim to hold under more favourable terms of tenancy than those which the landlord is prepared to concede, and he can acquire such rights by prescription. The only question in this case is, whether we are satisfied that, under the law, the defendant has acquired the Miras rights by adverse possession. His claim to such title depends entirely upon the fact that in Suit No. 283 of 1895 he contended that he was a Mirasdar. That suit was filed by the mortgagee Balaji's daughter and heir for redemption of the mortgage against the mortgagee, Krishnaji Shiralkar. The present defendant was joined as a party as he was cultivating one of the mortgaged lands as a tenant under a lease, Exhibit 72, and a kabuliyat, Exhibit 73. The Judge said: "The defendant No. 4 also contends that he has been in cultivation of the land, Survey No. 883, for upwards of 100 years and claims Miras rights over it. The rent notes put in here in Exhibits 59 and 77, coupled with plaintiff's admission that she has to contribute Rs. 22-8-0 annually for Survey Nos. 497 and 522, give good reason for saying that the contentions of defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 are not without foundation. These contentions cannot conveniently be decided in this suit. The plaintiff, therefore, must be referred to a separate suit in ejectment against defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4. It has been argued that this contention raised in the former suit has been considered probable by the Court and hence defendant is a Mirasdar. However, nothing can be more clear than the fact that the Court expressly treated that question as not directly and substantially in issue, and the mere expression of opinion as to probabilities in that judgment cannot be regarded as a decision of the question." The learned Trial Judge then considered what was sufficient to constitute a commencement of adverse possession of a superior tenure by a tenant, and he says: "The mere assertion of such a nature is not sufficient to constitute adverse possession. As between the holder of a superior and that of an inferior tenure, where things go on in accordance with the terms of the tenure, no adverse possession on the part of the holder of the under-tenure can arise, and there must be a distinct claim on his part of some right inconsistent with the tenure before his possession can become adverse to his superior landlord. There must be a distinct claim in opposition to the right of the landlord, which is brought to his notice and acquiesced in. The mere fact that the landlord, on hearing of the claim, does not take active steps against the tenant does not necessarily amount to acquiescence." The learned Judge, therefore, considered that the defendant had not become a Mirasdar by adverse possession.

GITABAI BHAI RAJMAHE V. KRISHNA MALHARI SHINDE.

sion, and passed a decree directing the defendant to put the plaintiff in possession. In first appeal this decree was reversed, the plaintiff's claim for possession was rejected and the defendant was directed to pay enhanced rent. The learned Judge relied on the decision of Thakore Fatesingji v. Bamanji (1). I see no reason to dissent from the decision in that case. But the principles laid down there must be applied to the facts of each case as they arise. It appears to me the simple question is, could the mortgagor in this case have filed a suit against the defendant for ejection before he redeemed the mortgage? For, it seems that, if the mortgagor could not file the suit until he redeemed, it would be absurd to say that time had begun to run against him until he did redeem, and that seems to have been the opinion of the Allahabad High Court in Muhammad Husain v. Mul Chand (2). That was a very similar case, where the plaintiff purchased the equity of redemption and then brought a suit to redeem. The claim was made by the defendant that he had acquired a title by adverse possession before the mortgage had been redeemed. The learned Judges said: "It has been more than once laid down by the High Courts of this country that possession, which may be adverse to the mortgagee, is not necessarily adverse to the mortgagor, the reason being, that the possession adverse to the mortgagor can only arise after the mortgagor has become entitled to immediate possession. Here the mortgagor was not entitled to such possession, nor would he be entitled to it until he redeemed the mortgage." In this case, although the defendant may have asserted in 1895 that he had the Miras rights, the mortgagor was not entitled to eject him. He was not entitled to take any steps until he redeemed the mortgage, and that really was the effect of the decision in that suit of 1895. The Judge in that case may have told the plaintiff he must file a separate suit in ejection against defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4, but I cannot think that he thereby decided that the plaintiff had an immediate right to file that suit before he had redeemed the mortgage. Therefore, this is not a case where a party takes proceedings in a certain Court and he is told that he has not appealed to the proper Court and is referred to another Court. It depends entirely whether he would be entitled, in the circumstances of the case, to appeal immediately to that other Court. It is clear that, if he had filed a separate suit against the defendant, he would have been given the same answer, that as mortgagor before redemption he had no right to file a suit.

In my opinion, therefore, this appeal must be allowed and the decree of the Trial Court restored.

Costs of the appeal and of the lower Appellate Court to follow the event.

FAWCETT, J.—I concur. I think, in the circumstances of the present case, the fact that the mortgagor, whose interests are now vested in the defendant, could not obtain immediate possession until the mortgage had actually been extinguished, is fatal to the plea that the defendant has obtained a title by adverse possession. It might have been different if the defendant had brought a suit under the Mamlatdars' Courts Act against the mortgagor, or, rather, his representative, and obtained an order restraining the latter from interfering with his possession. For, in that case, the circumstances would be similar to those in Bapu v. Mahadaji (3), where it was held that the defendant had acquired a title by adverse possession both against the mortgagor and against the mortgagee. But in the present case the redemption-suit of 1895 cannot be treated on the same footing. The decision in that suit merely amounts to saying that a redemption-suit of that kind was not a proper one in which to decide the question of title or the defendant's right to continue in possession. It cannot, therefore, in my opinion, be said that the defendant "successfully resisted" the plaintiff's claim to evict him in that suit within the meaning in which those words are used in Budesab v. Hanmanta (4). Nor does the principle laid down in Thakore Fatesingji v. Bamanji (1) assist the defendant in this case. There it is said: "If the tenant not only openly asserts, to the knowledge of the owner an adverse interest, but proceeds to enjoy benefits claimable only on the basis of that interest, his possession at once becomes adverse and limitation begins to run against the owner from that time." But in the present case the defendant did not enjoy any benefits other than those derived from his being a tenant under the mortgagee, so that, under the principle there laid down, the defendant's possession was not adverse to the mortgagor.

I concur, therefore, in allowing the appeal.

JUDGMENT.

TENNON, J.—In this appeal the question is, whether an application for execution is barred by limitation.

It appears that the respondent brought a suit on a hand-note against two persons, defendant No. 1, the father, and defendant No. 2, the son. His suit as against No. 1 was dismissed with costs, and as against defendant No. 2 was decreed with costs. This was on the 30th September 1912.

Against the order dismissing the suit against defendant No. 1 plaintiff appealed. Defendant No. 2 was no party to that appeal and did not himself appeal against the decree that was made against him. The plaintiff's appeal against defendant No. 1 was dismissed on the 23rd May 1914.

The plaintiff decree-holder then applied for execution of his decree against defendant No. 2 on the 19th of May 1917. That application was dismissed on default of prosecution, without service of notice on defendant No. 2.

Then followed the present application on the 8th of January 1918. This application is within three years from the first application, dated 19th of May 1917, but the contention of the judgment-debtor, defendant No. 2, is that the first application was itself barred by limitation.

The question in the appeal then is, whether time runs from the date of the decree against defendant No. 2, made in the Court of first instance on the 30th of September 1912, or from the 23rd of May 1914, that is, the date of the decree in the Appellate Court finally dismissing the plaintiff's claim against defendant No. 1.

The question is not free from difficulty. In support of his contention that time runs from the date of the decree of first Court, the appellant before us, the judgment-debtor, cites the cases Christianz Benshawn v. Benarasi Prasad (1), Lokenath Singh v. Gaju Singh (2) where Christiana Benshawn v. Benarasi Prasad (1) is cited or referred to with approval; *Umesh Chandra Roy v. and the Full Bench in Gopal Chander Manna v. Gosain Das Kalay (5).

But the cases cited on behalf of the appellant can be distinguished from the present case, while the cases Kristnama Chariar v. Mangammal (6) and Ari Ohetty v. Theerthamalai Ohetty (7) support the respondent. So do certain observations to be found in the Full Bench case Gopal Chander Manna v. Gosain Das Kalay (5). The case of Abdul Rahiman v. Maidin Saiba (8) has also been referred to, but that is the case of a mortgage.

It may further be observed that, if the appeal preferred by the plaintiff had resulted differently, the decree against defendant No. 1 would have been modified, inasmuch as it would then have become a decree under which defendants Nos. 1 and 2 would have been jointly and severally liable.

In the result, we dismiss this appeal with costs.

HOLDER—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182 (5)
—Application for time to ascertain judgment-debtor's share in attached property, whether step-in-aid of execution.

An application by a decree-holder for time to enable him to ascertain the share of the judgment-debtor in certain property attached in execution of the decree, is an application to take a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of clause (5) of Article 182 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, and operates to save limitation. [p. 917, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Ratnagiri, in Appeal No. 310 of 1918, confirming the order passed by the Subordinate Judge, at Dapoli, in Darkhast No. 305 of 1917.

Mr. N. V. Gokhale, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. V. Kane, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this appeal is, whether the present Darkhast filed by the decree-holder on the 1st October 1917 is in time. The decree under execution was passed on the 19th September 1912. The first Darkhast was presented on the 4th of March 1913. It appears that, during the pendency of a certain suit, the execution was stayed from 28th July 1913 to 27th July 1914. It also appears that the Darkhast of 1913 was adjourned from time to time from 12th October 1914 to 21st September 1915, during the pendency of certain miscellaneous proceedings relating to the investigation of claims to the attached property put forward by third parties. Both the lower Courts have held that the present Darkhast is in time, because the decree-holder is entitled, under section 15 of the Indian Limitation Act, to exclude the time from 23rd July 1913 to 27th July 1914, and from 12th October 1914 to 21st September 1915. It is clear from the dates, and it is not disputed, that if these periods were excluded, the present Darkhast would be in time. The lower Appellate Court also relied upon an application made by the decree-holder on the 5th of August 1915, for time to enable him to obtain information regarding the defendant's share in certain property which was attached. This application has been held by the lower Appellate Court to be a step in aid of execution. If it is a step-in-aid of execution, it is clear that, apart from the first ground, the present Darkhast would be in time.

Two points have been urged before me on behalf of the appellant, judgment debtor: first, that the period from 12th October 1914 to the 21st September 1915, cannot be excluded under section 15 of the Indian Limitation Act, because there is no order staying the execution of the decree, and, secondly, that the application of the 5th August is not a step-in-aid of execution and that it is really an application in retardation of the execution.

RAM CHANDRA SAGOREMULL v. AMARCHAND MURALIDHAR.

As regards the first point I am by no means satisfied that the decree-holder is entitled to the deduction of the time from 21st October 1914 to 21st September 1915, under section 15 of the Indian Limitation Act. The section provides that, in computing the period of limitation prescribed for any application for the execution of the decree the time of the continuance of the order staying the execution of the decree shall be excluded. Admittedly, there is no written order staying the execution of the decree during this period from 12th October 1914 to the 21st of September 1915. All that I find from the Razanama is, that the matter was adjourned from time to time during this interval. It is not without significance that it is during that interval that the application, which is relied upon as a step-in-aid of execution by the decree holder, was made. I do not say that, under section 15 of the Indian Limitation Act, a written order staying the execution of the decree is necessary; but I think that there must be a clear order staying the execution of the decree. I do not think that the orders of adjournment from time to time could be properly construed as orders directing stay of the execution of the decree. I am, therefore, not prepared to accept the view taken by the lower Courts that this period can be excluded under section 15.

There is, however, the point relating to the application made on the 5th August 1915. Under Article 182, clause (5), of the third column of the Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, the decree-holder would be entitled to present the application for execution within three years from the date of his applying, in accordance with law, to the proper Court to take some step-in-aid of execution of the decree. It is clear that the expression 'step-in-aid of the execution of decree' must be construed liberally. I feel satisfied that the application, Exhibit 37, was made to take a step-in-aid of the execution. On its face, it is an application for time being granted, to enable the plaintiff to inquire about, and to state the particulars as regards, the extent of the share of the judgment-debtor in the village of Singlat which was put up for sale. Such information would be necessary for the proper preparation of the proclamation of sale; and an application for adjournment to get such information ought to be treated as an application to take a step-in-aid of execution. The fact that, subsequently, the decree-holder asked for adjournments and allowed that particular Darbhast to drop, has no bearing upon the question whether this application was made in order to take a step-in-aid of execution. I am unable to accept the suggestion made on behalf of the appellant that, in view of the subsequent adjournments, this application should be treated as an application in retardation of the execution.

I am satisfied that the Darbhast is in time. I affirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Decree confirmed.

Under the powers given by section 9 of the Presidency Towns Small Cause Courts Act, the High Court added the following to rule 92 of the Rules of Practice of the Court of Small Causes at Calcutta:—

"Provided that the Court may, if in its opinion no sufficient grounds are shown for the application, dismiss it without directing service on the party against whom the application is made."

Held, that the object of the foregoing addition was to remove the difficulty whereby a preliminary hearing was precluded for the purpose of finding out whether there were grounds for the application such as are indicated in the rule itself; that the rule was not obiter but that, so far as applications under section 9 of the Act were concerned, the preliminary hearing must be before a Bench of the Small Cause Court. JUDGMENT.—This is an application on behalf of a firm called Ramchandra Sagore.

RAM CHANDRA SAGOREMULL V. AMARCHAND MURALIDHAR.

mull for an order under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for the setting aside of certain orders made by the Calcutta Court of Small Causes. The application has arisen under the following circumstances:—

On the 17th April 1919 the applicant firm instituted a suit in the Small Cause Court against the firm of Amarchand Muralidhar for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 400 as damages for breach of a certain contract, by which the latter firm had agreed to sell to the applicant firm three bales of Mullmull on certain terms and conditions to which it is unnecessary to refer. That suit was numbered 8785 of 1919. On or about the 30th April 1919, the firm of Amarchand-Muralidhar filed a cross suit against the applicant firm for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 157 8-0 as being the damages alleged to have been sustained by them on account of the applicant firm not having taken delivery of the goods referred to above under the said contract. The last mentioned suit was numbered as 9532 of 1919. The said two suits came on for hearing before the learned Second Judge of the Small Cause Court on the 24th November 1919. The applicant firm's suit was dismissed and a decree for a sum of Rs. 58-2-0 was passed in the suit which had been instituted by Amarchand-Muralidhar against the applicant firm. On the 1st December 1919, two applications were filed before Mr. Dobbin who was the Trial Judge in the Small Cause Court, by the applicant firm in the said two suits, asking that the order of dismissal in the first suit and the decree in the second suit should be set aside, and praying for new trials in the said two suits. These applications were refused by Mr. Dobbin on the 1st December 1919. It is alleged by the applicant firm that the said applications were presented to the Trial Judge, so that he might, in accordance with what is stated to be the usual practice in the Small Cause Court, order the issue of notices on the firm of Amarchand Muralidhar returnable before the Full Bench of the Small Cause Court in order that they might show cause why the order of dismissal in the first suit and the decree in the second suit should not be set aside or such other order made as the circumstances of the two cases required. It is urged that Mr. Dobbin, in summarily dismissing the two applications referred to above acted without jurisdiction and with material irregularity. It is further urged that any power conferred on a Judge of the Small Cause Court to refuse to issue notices on applications, like the one referred to above, is ultra vires and bad.

In support of the applicant firm's contentions, Mr. Chandhuri has taken me through rules 92 to 95 of the Rules of Practice of the Small Cause Court as they stood before the amendment to the rules published in the Calcutta Gazette of the 1st July 1919, on page 1128 thereof, came into effect. He argues that the addition to rule 92 of the Rules of Practice of the Small Cause Court, under the Notification of the 9th July 1919, published as above, if it authorises a Single Judge to dispose of applications like these, is ultra vires inasmuch as the applicant for a new trial has been deprived of what is described as a right, hitherto enjoyed, of having applications for new trials considered by a Bench of the Judges of the Small Cause Court, usually composed of the Trying Judge and the Chief Judge, and in support of his contention he has referred me to the case reported as Madurai Pillai v. Muthu Chetty (1).

Now, the power given to the High Court to make rules under the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act is to be found in section 9 of the Act, and it is laid down there that the High Court may, from time to time, by rules having the force of law, prescribe the procedure to be followed and the practice to be observed by the Small Cause Court, and that rules made thereunder may provide, amongst other matters, for the exercise by one or more of the Judges of the Small Cause Court of any of the powers conferred on the Small Cause Court by the Act, or any other enactment for the time being in force. The application for a new trial is made under section 35 of the Act, and is laid down therein that the Small Cause Court may, on the application of either party, within eight days from the date of the decree or order in a suit, order a new trial to be held, or alter, set aside or reverse the decree or order upon such terms as it thinks reasonable, and may, in the meantime, stay the proceedings. There is, it will be observed, nothing in the Act itself regarding the formation of a Bench of Judges for the purpose of applications under section 38, and it may be noticed, in passing, that the only provision in the Act about the formation of a Bench with more Judges than one is to be found in sections 11 and 69. The Act makes no distinction between a Judge, and more than one Judge, of the Small Cause Court, and what is spoken of is the Small Cause Court, whether it consists of one Judge or more than one Judge. I do not propose to go into the question as to whether the jurisdiction exercised by the Small Cause Court under section 38 of the Act is appellate or revisional, as to which there has been a good deal of controversy. [See Shi Lal Padama, In re, (2), Budhu Lal v. Ohattu Gope (3), Srinivasa Charlu v. Balaji Rau (4).]

Now, the question arises, has the High Court made a rule for the exercise by one Judge of the Small Cause Court of the powers conferred on the Small Cause Court by section 38 of the Act? To my mind, it has not. The addition to rule 92 does not, in my opinion, indicate that a Bench need not henceforth be formed on the lines laid down in rule 95 for the purpose of giving the applicant a preliminary hearing. I am strengthened in my view by the fact that rule 95 remains unaltered. Rule 92, as it stood before the amendment, precluded a preliminary hearing for the purpose of finding out whether there were grounds for applications such as were indicated in the rule itself. The object of the addition to rule 92 was to get rid of this difficulty and to provide for a preliminary hearing in two classes of applications, (i) in the applications referred to in rules 62, 64, 67 or 69, and (ii) in applications under section 33 of the Act. The addition to rule 92 is not ultra vires; but so far as applications under section 38 of the Act are concerned, the preliminary hearing must be before a Bench formed on the lines laid down in rule 95, with the result that no notice would issue thereafter, except on good grounds in order that opportunities for protracting cases might be diminished.

In this view of the matter, the orders of the 1st December 1919, in the two suits referred to above, must be set aside and the application for new trials in the two suits mentioned above must be considered again by a Bench of the Small Cause Court formed on the lines laid down in rule 95. — No order as to costs of this application.

A minor appellant, whose appeal has been dismissed in default, cannot take advantage of section 6 of the Limitation Act for making an application for restoration of the appeal [p. 921, cols. 1 & 2.]

Order XLI, rule 19 of the Civil Procedure Code does not exhaust the powers of an Appellate Court to re-admit an appeal dismissed for default. [p. 921, cols. 1 & 2.]

In a proper case, it is open to the Court to make an order re-admitting an appeal dismissed for default in the exercise of its inherent powers for the ends of justice. This power should, however, be sparingly used and only when a clear case is made out, but the power is exercisable without any reference to the period of limitation provided for an application to re-admit an appeal or any other proceeding. Where the next friend of a minor appellant is of unsound mind, the absence of the minor at the date of the hearing of the appeal cannot be treated as default. [p. 924, col. 1.]

SONUBAI BABURAO v. SHIVAJIRAO K. KISHNARAO.

JUDGMENT.

SEAH, J.—These are two applications by Sonubai, widow of Baburao, to set aside the orders made by this Court on the 28th February 1916 dismissing the appeal and rejecting the application under Extraordinary Jurisdiction filed on her behalf by her next friend for default under Order XLI, rule 17. The circumstances under which the applications are made are these: Sonubai's husband, Baburao, filed Suit No. 410 of 1911 in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Poona for a partition of the joint family property and to recover his half share against Krishnarao. One Limbaji had three sons, Balwantrao, Gopalrao and Gangaram. Balwantrao died leaving a son, Baburao. Gopalrao died leaving a son Krishnarao. Thus Baburao and Krishnarao were cousins. Gangaram was not joined as a party to the suit, as it was stated that he had already separated. The joint property was stated to be very valuable. Baburao valued his half share at Rs. 18,72,005. In 1912, Gangaram filed Suit No. 359 of 1912 in the same Court in his own right and on behalf of his minor son—Yadurao alias Baburao—for one-third share in the joint family property. He joined Baburao Balwantrao as a party to this suit. He valued his one-third share at about Rs. 9,72,000. Baburao died in June 1913, leaving a minor widow, Sonubai. An application was made on her behalf by her father, Keshav Sambhajirao, in August 1913, to bring her on the record as the legal representative of her husband, and to allow her to continue the suit. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the right to sue did not survive and that the suit abated, and ordered accordingly, on the 10th of September 1913. It appears, however, that she was brought on the record in Gangaram's suit as the legal representative of her deceased husband in which Baburao was defendant No. 2. Sonubai's father filed Appeal No. 153 of 1914 in forma pauperis in this Court against the abatement, treating it as a decree, through Mr. Vidhvans, a vakil of this Court. The claim was valued at about Rs. 18,72,005. He also filed application No. 283 of 1913, under the Extraordinary Jurisdiction of this Court against the same order, through the same vakil. This was intended, apparently, to meet the possible objection that the order of abatement was not appealable as a decree or an order. Mr. Vidhvans died in May 1915. Thereafter, a notice of his death was served upon the next friend of Sonubai. But he did not appear, and took no steps to prosecute the appeal or the application. On the 28th February 1916 my learned brother, Batchelor, and I dismissed the appeal for default under Order XLI, rule 17. Neither party appeared at the time. The application also was rejected for default. Sonubai attained majority on the 21st February 1919, when she completed her 18th year. She made the present application (No. 302 of 1919), on the 11th March 1919, to discharge the order dismissing the appeal for default, and a similar application (No. 303 of 1919) to discharge the order rejecting the application under the Extraordinary Jurisdiction for default, on the same day.

In support of these applications it is alleged by Sonubai that her father is an old man, who has been insane for nearly five years; that he was not in a position to act for her as her next friend or guardian on the record at the date of the order made by this Court or at the date when the notice of the death of Mr. Vidhvans was served upon him. Some affidavits have been filed in support of her applications. The applications are opposed by Krishnarao's minor son, Shivajirao, Krishnarao having died during the interval. The minor son of Krishnarao is represented by his mother and guardian, Banubai, on the record. It is asserted on her behalf that Sonubai's father was competent to act and did act in Gangaram's suit as the guardian of Sonubai.

I have not referred to the allegation in Sonubai's petitions as to the interest and conduct of the alienees from Baburao with reference to the estate and the litigation relating to the estate. It is not necessary to do so for the purpose of these applications.

It may be mentioned that Gangaram's suit, after certain proceedings, was finally decided only in April last. It is unnecessary in this application to go into the reasons of this delay. But the decree in the suit is now under appeal, preferred to this Court by Sonubai. The Trial Court in that suit has held that Sonubai is debarred from claiming the share of her husband in consequence of the order of abatement in Baburao's suit, SONUBAI BABURAO V. SHIVAJIRAO KRISHNARAO.

On the facts stated above, we have to consider whether a case is made out for discharging the orders made by this Court on the 28th February 1916.

On behalf of the applicant it is urged, as a preliminary objection, that the application is barred by limitation under Article 168 of the Indian Limitation Act, and that the minority of Sonubai is not a ground for not giving effect to the provisions of this Article, as such an application is not within the scope of section 6 of the Act. It is urged that, in spite of her minority, the present application is barred, as it is made long after the date of the dismissal. It seems to me that Article 168 applies to an application for the re-admission of an appeal under Order XLI, rule 19, under which, if sufficient cause is shown for default, the Court is bound to re-admit the appeal. Such an application is outside the terms of section 6 and the minority of Sonubai is no answer to the plea of limitation. I am of opinion that the preliminary objection would be good, if the powers of the Court to re-admit the appeal were confined only to rule 19 of Order XLI and I would be bound to give effect to it. But if rule 19 does not exhaust the powers of the Court to re-admit an appeal or an application dismissed for default, and if it is open to the Court to deal with these applications under section 151 of the Code, and to make an order to that effect for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court, the preliminary objection cannot succeed, as the period of limitation will have no application to the exercise of such powers. The delay would undoubtedly be an element to be considered in exercising the powers under the section which, in the very nature of things, ought to be sparingly exercised. But the inherent powers of the Court would be exercisable without any reference to the period of limitation fixed for applications to re-admit appeals or to restore any other proceeding dismissed for default.

The questions, therefore, are whether it is open to this Court to make an order re-admitting the appeal and the application in the exercise of its inherent powers, and whether the facts brought to our notice render it necessary to make such an order for the ends of justice.

As regards the first question, I am of opinion that the Court has such a power. The provisions of rule 19 are not exhaustive on the point. Under that rule, the Court is bound to re-admit the appeal if sufficient cause is shown for the default, without any reference to the merits of the appeal. The inherent powers of the Court to discharge an order made for default depend upon somewhat different considerations. The corresponding provision in the Code of 1882 has been interpreted by Bhashyam Ayyangar J., in that sense in Somayya v. Subbamma (1). In Lalla Prasad v. Ram Karan (2) the Court took the same view as to the meaning and scope of Order IX, rule 9. It is also clear that a minor, on attaining majority, can sue to have any decree against him set aside on the ground of fraud or negligence on the part of his next friend or guardian, as the observations of Farran, J., in Cursandas Natha v. Ladkatapu (3) show. In Lalla Sheo Churn Lal v. Ramnandan Dobe (4) a minor, on attaining majority, was allowed to sue on the same cause of action, in spite of an order dismissing his suit for default under section 102 during his minority on similar grounds. When it is open to the minor to resort to that remedy, I do not see why it should not be open to a Court to help the minor in an application to set aside the order made on default, if it be shown that the next friend or the guardian was unable to act or was negligent in the discharge of his duties. The reasoning in Lalla Sheo Churn's case (4) supports this view. It may be that, under the circumstances of a particular case, the Court may leave the minor to his remedy by way of suit in view of the necessity of testing the allegations as to negligence or fraud in the strict manner in which they could be tested in a suit. But I see no sufficient reason to hold that that is the only remedy, and that the Court has no power to help the minor otherwise with reference to an order made in consequence of the default of the next friend of the minor. SONUBAI BABURAO v. SHIVAJIRAO KRISHNARAO.

Biriobuttee v. Pertaub Sing (5) and Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Habib Shah (6) appear to me to support the view that, in a proper case, it is open to the Court to make an order re-admitting the appeal or the application in the exercise of its inherent powers for the ends of justice.

The next question is, whether the facts in this case demand that the power should be exercised in favour of the petitioner. The broad facts are, that Baburao sued for his share in a large estate and died during the pendency of the suit. His widow was a minor then, claiming to be entitled to his share on the ground that the severance of interest was effected during her husband's lifetime. Her father, as her next friend, tried to put forward her rights, but failed in the lower Court. He appealed to this Court, but his Pleader died and, after the Pleader's death, he did not or could not take any steps to prosecute the appeal. On attaining majority Sonubai has applied to this Court, without losing any time, within a month after attaining majority, to allow her to prosecute the appeal. She points out that her father could not act as her next friend at the time when he received the notice of the Pleader's death in November 1915 or thereabout, owing to his demented condition, brought on probably by old age. On the materials before the Court, the allegation as to his insanity could be neither accepted nor rejected without further inquiry. But whether on that ground or on any other ground, he failed to prosecute the appeal on behalf of his daughter, which affected her right to considerable property, worth about eighteen lacs of rupees according to the valuation in the appeal. In Gangaram's suit the one third share is valued at about Rs. 9,79,000 (nine lacs and seventy-nine thousand). The order of abatement may have the effect of negating her right to such property completely. I do not say that it has such an effect. That will have to be considered in the appeal which she has filed in this Court from the decree in Gangaram's suit. At any rate, the Trial Court in that suit has taken that view, and the abatement may fairly be treated, for the purpose of these applications, as seriously jeopardizing her right to her husband's share in the property. In a matter of such importance, her next friend failed to act for his minor daughter. I do not think it could serve any useful purpose to delay the disposal of these applications by asking the lower Court to find on further evidence as to whether the allegation as to insanity is proved. It would largely be a matter of inference from his present condition as to whether in November 1915 he was insane, as alleged by Sonubai. His failure to act seems to me to indicate—and must be taken under the circumstances of this case to indicate—either inability due to physical incapacity or negligence on his part to safeguard the interests of his daughter.

Looking broadly at the merits of the order of abatement, which it is permissible to take into account in determining the 'ends of justice', it is fair to say that, if the appeal had been heard on the merits in February 1916, this Court would have been bound to consider the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Suraj Narain v. Iqbal Narain (7), decided in December 1912, in connection with the question of the severance of interests; and whatever may have been the accepted view in this Presidency then, it is not unreasonable to say that this Court might have—I do not say would have—taken the view which a Full Bench of the Madras High Court took in October 1915 in Soundararajam v. Arunachalam Ohetty (8) as to the effect of these observations. At the same time, I do not see any need or justification for rigorously excluding from our consideration the decisions of the Privy Council after February 1916, which may make the merits of the appeal appear stronger and clearer, in determining now what the ends of justice require. I do not desire to prejudge the merits of the appeal; but it is hardly possible, and not fair, to exclude what I may call the prima facie merits of the appeal from consideration in deciding whether, for the ends of justice, this Court should exercise the powers under section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure. On the other hand, the re-admission of the appeal cannot prejudice the just rights of the opponent. I have not overlooked the fact, which has been pressed upon our attention by Mr. Bhandarkar, that the opponent is a minor.

I am conscious that the inherent powers reserved under section 151 should be sparingly exercised and only when a clear case is made out. After a careful consideration of all the circumstances, I have come to the conclusion that, for the ends of justice, it is necessary to discharge the orders dismissing the appeal and the application for default, to re-admit the appeal and the application, and to allow the present petitioner to prosecute the same against the present opponent as the legal representative of the deceased Krishnarao. I would make the Rules absolute and order accordingly.

Under the circumstances, I would order the applicant, Sonubai, to pay the opponent's costs in both the applications.

In the view I have taken, it is needless to consider the suggestion that, if necessary, the applications may be treated as applications for review and that the delay may be excused under section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act. The procedure appropriate for review would be different, and it is not essential to pursue this point further.

CRUMP, J.—In this matter Mr. Bhandarkar for the respondent has taken a preliminary objection that the application is barred by Article 168 of Schedule I of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. The facts necessary, in order to understand the position, are as follows:—

In 1911, one Baburao sued for partition and a share in a joint family estate. On June 10th, 1913, during the pendency of that suit, Baburao died. His wife, who is now the applicant before us, was at that date a minor. On August 4th, 1913, she applied to be placed on the record as heir of the deceased plaintiff. For the purposes of that application, she was represented by her father in the capacity of next friend. Her application was dismissed on September 10th, 1913, on the ground that the right to sue did not survive, and it was ordered that the suit should abate. From that order the next friend lodged an appeal in the High Court, and Mr. Vidhwans, a Pleader of this Court, was appointed to conduct the appeal. Before the hearing, Mr. Vidhwans died, and, in accordance with the usual practice, a notice was served on the next friend on November 4th, 1915, directing him to appear, and stating that on failure the appeal would be dismissed for default. The appeal came on for hearing in due course on 28th February 1916 and neither side put in an appearance: it was accordingly dismissed under Order XLI, rule 17 of the Code of Civil Procedure, on that day. The applicant attained majority on February 21st, 1919, and, on March 11th, 1919, she moved this Court, under Order XLI, rule 19, to re-admit the appeal.

If, in such a case, a minor is properly represented by a next friend, it would ordinarily follow that an application to re-admit the appeal must be made within thirty days, the time allowed by Article 168 of Schedule I of the Indian Limitation Act. In this case, however, it is alleged, at the outset, that the next friend became insane about the year 1914. The allegation is supported by substantial affidavits and it is necessary to consider the case on that basis.

Assuming the allegation of insanity to be well founded, the position is, that a minor litigant has been prevented from appealing to this Court by reason of the fact that her next friend was of unsound mind, and her claim to a large estate has been allowed to go by default. The result would be deplorable were there no remedy, but the hardship is no ground for interfering, unless interference is warranted by the powers of the Court.

In my opinion, a person who is of unsound mind cannot act as next friend. This is, indeed, clearly laid down by Order XXXII, rule 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But it is urged that, where a next friend becomes insane after appointment, the remedy is to move the Court for his removal under rule 9 of that Order and that, unless and until this is done, the minor is bound by the acts of the next friend as though he were of sound mind. I am unable to accede to this contention. In my opinion, a next friend who is of unsound mind is no next friend at all for he is not qualified to act. The case, therefore, falls within the scope of Order XXXII, rule 5, and the order dismissing the appeal may be discharged on the ground that the minor was not represented by a next friend.

But even if this rule is not applicable, the case would be one in which the Court ought, I think, to interfere ex debito justitiæ, and the inherent powers of the Court under section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure can very properly be applied to this case. The principles on which the Privy Council acted in Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Habib Shah (6) are applicable. To rank the absence of a minor, whose next friend is of unsound mind, in the category of default is not very stateable. An order passed in these circumstances is a nullity.

But apart from the question of the insanity of the next friend, which might in itself call for further enquiry beyond the affidavit on the record, the circumstances disclose negligence so gross, whether arising from insanity or not, as to be in itself a sufficient ground for avoiding the order. The facts speak for themselves. There is a very large estate at stake. The refusal to place the minor on the record as heir of her husband has deprived her, or may deprive her, of that estate. I say "may deprive her," for the exact effect of the order of abatement is not certain. That order was challenged by an appeal, and certainly there is at least an arguable case. That case would indubitably have been argued but for the unfortunate death of the Pleader engaged. At this point the next friend became blind to his plain duty and took no steps to appoint another Pleader. A clearer case of the grossest negligence could hardly be found. It can hardly be doubted that, where a minor is concerned, the gross negligence of a next friend is a ground on which the avoidance of proceedings may be sought even where there is a statutory bar: cf. Lalla Sheo Ohurn v. Ramnandan Dobey (4). It is impossible to permit the estate of an infant to be lost in this way, and, in my opinion, the inherent powers of the Court are wide enough to enable us to make such orders as the interests of justice require. The orders proposed by my learned brother are, in my opinion, appropriate ex debito justitiæ.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92—Suit by pujari of temple to establish right to share in offerings, nature of—Scheme framed—Suit, whether maintainable—Procedure, proper.

A suit by a hereditary pujari of a temple to establish his right to a certain share in the offerings made to the deity, which are prima facie temple property, falls under clause (c) of sub-section (1) of section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code. Where a scheme has already been framed in respect of the temple properties, such a suit is not maintainable, and the proper procedure is, to apply to the Court, which framed the scheme, to give directions as to the application of this particular fund. ## JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The plaintiff in this case is one of the pujaris of the well-known temple of Sbri Bhargavram, near Chiplun. He filed the present suit to recover Rs. 91-8 0 as damages from defendants Nos. 1 to 10, the Guravs connected with this temple. He also prayed for an injunction restraining them from collecting the offerings made to the deity during the period of his turn to serve as a pujari. His allegation was that, as one of the hereditary pujaris of this temple, he had the right to officiate in the months of Magh and Phalgun of the Shaka year 1838 and that, during that time, the defendants Nos. 1 to 10 forcibly prevented him from entering the temple and from receiving the offerings laid before the deity. The plaintiff's claim was, that he was entitled to receive these offerings in accordance with the long-established usage of the institution, according to which the offerings were to be appropriated by the pujaris. The Guravs defended the suit on the ground that they were entitled to the offerings. They also contended that the suit was not maintainable. At a later stage the defendants Nos. 11 to 15, who are members of the Devasthan Committee appointed by the District Court, were joined as parties to the suit. They contended that the Guravs had no right to take the offerings, and that the Ganpules were entitled to take the offerings in accordance with the arrangement arrived at in 1841 between the then pujaris and the members of the Devasthan Committee, which was at that time appointed by the Collector of the District.

The Trial Court found that the plaintiff was entitled to act as pujari at the time mentioned in the plaint; that the Guravs had taken away offerings to the extent of Rs. 66, and that, according to the evidence, if the suit was maintainable, the sum awardable to the plaintiff would be Rs. 35. The Trial Court was of opinion that the suit was not maintainable in the form in which it was brought, on the ground that the offerings to the deity were voluntary and uncertain and that these offerings would not be property within the meaning of section 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the result, the plaintiff's suit was dismissed.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Court and, subject to a slight variation as to the amount, which might be payable to the plaintiff if the claim were maintainable, the Appellate Court affirmed the view of the Trial Court. It may be mentioned that, in the course of the trial, the plaintiff admitted through his Pleader that the offerings to the deity belonged, in the first instance, to the temple and formed part of the property of the temple; but he maintained that, in virtue of his right as an hereditary pujari and in accordance with the long established usage of the institution, he was entitled to appropriate that sum. The decree of the Trial Court was affirmed by the Assistant Judge who heard the appeal.

The plaintiff has appealed from this decree. It has been urged on his behalf that the lower Courts are wrong in their view that, the offerings being temple property, the suit is not maintainable. In support of this contention, reliance is placed upon section 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is contended that it is a suit in which the right to property is contested and that a Civil Court has jurisdiction to try it. It is also urged that, on the merits, the lower Courts have taken an erroneous view as to the arrangement between the pujaris and the members of the Devasthan Committee in 1841. It is urged that this arrangement really affirmed what was then an established usage of the institution.

On the other hand, on behalf of the Gurave, it has been contended that the suit is not maintainable, as there is no right to property in contest within the meaning of section 9. On the merits it is urged that the finding of the lower Appellate Court, that the Guravs and the Ganpules are entitled to divide the offerings equally, should be accepted.

On behalf of the trustees it has been urged that the suit is not maintainable. It has been pointed out that, though they took up a position in the Trial Court which is not consistent with the position now taken up on their behalf, it was due to a misapprehension on their part of their legal position, and that, properly speaking, the suit is not maintainable. Though the point was not raised by any of the parties in the course of the argument, we felt a doubt as to whether the suit would not be barred in view of the provisions of section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We accordingly invited arguments on the point, and we have heard the parties fully. It is a point not taken in either of the Courts below and it was not taken before us, though Mr. Gharpure's contention on behalf of the trustees came fairly near the point based on the provisions of section 92.

The amount of the claim in suit is very small; but the plaintiff seeks in this suit to establish his right not only to recover certain amount as damages in consequence of the alleged wrongful act of the Gurave, but also to restrain them from obstructing him in the enjoyment of the offerings placed before the deity. No relief is claimed against the trustees. But they are parties to the suit, and if the plaintiff's claim were decided on the merits it is clear that the decision would be binding upon them.

Before proceeding to deal with the point as to the effect of section 92, Civil Procedure Code, I desire to make it clear that I am by no means satisfied that the lower Courts are right in their view that the present suit is not maintainable, apart from the provisions of section 92. It seems to me that, though the offerings may be uncertain and voluntary still, when the offerings are made, they are the property of the temple. Undoubtedly, this suit relates to that property, and I do not see how it can be said that the Civil Courts cannot try it, unless it can be shown that the cognizance of such a suit is expressly or impliedly barred.

The only bar suggested is that created by the provisions of section 92. In connection with the point relating to section 92, it is necessary to state that in 1889 a suit was brought under section 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure, then in force, by some of the pujaris against the then members of the Devasthan Committee. The suit was decided in 1897, and a decree was passed appointing certain persons as trustees, and framing a scheme. It is not necessary to set forth this scheme in detail. Clause 2 provides that: The "members (i. e., members of the Devasthan Committee) shall conduct the affairs of the Devasthan according to the long established usages thereof. They shall keep clear and accurate accounts of all the transactions... No suit shall be filed and no other new or important step taken without the consent in writing of the majority of the Committee. In all disputed matters, the decision shall be according to the opinion of the majority to be recorded in writing." The scheme further mentions that, "the rules embody all the matters on which it appears at present necessary to give directions." There is no specific reservation in the scheme for any application to add to or alter the scheme.

The question is, whether sub-section (2) of section 92 creates any bar to this suit. Under that sub-section it is provided that no suit, claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub-section (1), shall be instituted in respect of any such trust as is therein referred to, except in conformity with the provisions of that section. The question is, whether the nature of the suit, including the relief claimed by the plaintiff, brings the case within the scope of section 92, sub-section (1). In determining the nature of the suit, we must look not merely to the form but to the substance. As I read the plaint and the prayer clause, it appears that the plaintiff claims to be one of the hereditary pujaris and to have certain rights, in virtue of his position as such hereditary pujari, in accordance with the usage of the institution, to a certain part of the temple funds. It is common ground that the funds, (i. e., in this case the offerings) laid before the deity belong to the temple and are to be managed and administered by the members of the Devasthan Committee under the scheme. It is in relation to this fund that a relief is asked by the plaintiff, which in effect amounts to asking for an appropriation of these funds for the benefit of the officiating pujaris. On the other hand, the Guravs maintain that they have a right to this part of the temple property. Undoubtedly, a dispute has arisen, between the pujaris and the Guravs, who are both connected with the temple and whose services in connection with the temple are necessary, as to whether the offerings made to the deity should be given to the pujaris exclusively, or should be divided between them and the Guravs, and, if so, in what proportion. Such a claim clearly invites the direction of the Court for the administration of this trust property. There is no dispute, and there can be none, that this property is part of a trust created for public purposes of a religious nature. In fact, that position had been accepted in the suit filed under section 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure, corresponding to the present section 92. It also appears to me that, in substance, in this suit the Court is invited to determine and declare what proportion of this part of the trust property shall be allocated to the pujaris and the Guravs. Looked at in that light, the suit seems to me to relate to a relief which would be covered by clause (e) of section 92. It is clear that, if a suit had been brought in accordance with the provisions of section 92 by the Advocate-General or by any two or more persons interested in the trust with the leave of the Advocate-General, and if the directions of the Court had been sought as to the appropriation of the offerings made to the deity, the District Court would have been bound to entertain the suit under section 92, as such a suit would clearly be covered by sub-section (1) of that section. In the course of the argument before us, it is conceded that if such a suit were brought by the Advocate-General, and if the relief, as I have stated above, were claimed by him, the suit would be well within the scope of section 92. But it is urged that in the present case the plaintiff seeks relief in his private capacity in respect of a right which he asserts against the Gurave to this particular part of the trust property, and that such a suit cannot be said to be within the scope of section 92. This argument proceeds merely upon the form and not the substance of the suit. The nature of the relief claimed and the allegations in the plaint, upon which the claim is based, must be looked at. It seems to me to be clearly a suit in which the direction of the Court is sought as to the administration of this part of the trust fund. It is true that, under the scheme, the trustees themselves, if they had been alive to their duty, might have been able to deal with this matter. If necessary, they might have and could have sought further directions of the Court which framed the scheme. But that has not been done by the members of the Devasthan Committee and they have allowed the dispute to go on between the Ganpules and the Guravs, though the trust funds belong to the temple and are liable to be managed and administered by them under the scheme.

When once the scheme has been framed, it is clear that the funds must be administered in accordance with the provisions of that scheme. No separate suit relating to the apportionment or administration of any part of the funds between any persons connected with the temple, who are not themselves trustees but who are under the trustees, can be allowed in view of the provisions of section 92.

In connection with this point, I may refer to the case of Rama Das v. Hanumuntha Row (1). The facts and the circumstances of that case were undoubtedly different; but the ratio decidendi seems to me to be applicable to the present case. As pointed out at page 369* of the report, the principle adopted is apparently that the scheme once settled by a Court cannot be altered except by the Court. This would seem to preclude suits between parties to establish a private right, which, if established, would interfere with a charitable scheme settled by the Court. In the present case we have a scheme settled by the District Court. True it is, that the scheme is not detailed and makes no specific provision for the allocation of this fund. But the duty of managing the temple funds, which would include the offerings placed before the deity, is laid on the members of the Devasthan Committee, who are required to administer the same in accordance with the long established usage of the institution. I do not see how, if a suit of the present character between the Ganpules and the Guravs were allowed in respect of what is called the private right of the Ganpules against the Gurave, the scheme settled by the Court could remain uninterfered with.

It has been urged on behalf of the plaintiff that his position is really that of a stranger with reference to the trust, so far as the present claim is concerned. Indeed, if that fact were established his suit would be outside the scope of section 92. But I am unable to accept the contention that the plaintiff is in the position of a stranger. The cases cited to us at the Bar are mostly cases, in which the dispute was between the trustees in charge of the trust and the strangers who had trespassed upon the trust property. I do not see how, either the Ganpules or the Garavs can be treated as strangers to the temple and how, any suit, to which they and the trustees are parties, could be said to be a suit between the trustees and the strangers as contemplated in these cases. Some of the cases cited before us bear upon the question as to whether any dispute between the trustees would be within the scope of section 92. We are not concerned in the present case with the decisions which bear on the question as to whether one trustee could maintain a suit against his co-trustee in respect of the alleged wrongful act of the co-trustee. It is sufficient, for the purpose of this case, to observe that these decisions have no bearing upon the present case in which the dispute is between two classes of servants or hereditary officers of the temple. Such a dispute relates, in my opinion, to the administration of the trust, and any clear and definite direction on the point in the scheme would be decisive and binding upon the parties. In the argument before us it is conceded that it was open to any of the parties to move the District Court to supplement the scheme by specific provisions as to the division of this fund. But it is urged that it was only an additional remedy and did not bar the present suit. I am of opinion that section 92, sub section (2), bars the cognizance of this suit by the Court, in which the suit was filed.

The further question as to what is the proper course for the plaintiff to adopt under the circumstances, is one upon which, it is not strictly necessary for us to express any opinion. It has been accepted before us at the Bar that it is open to any one interested in this fund to apply to the District Court, which framed the scheme, to supplement or modify the same. It is not suggested that a separate suit under section 92 is necessary. Though no liberty to apply is reserved under the scheme, such a reservation can be always implied. An application to the District Court seems to be the obvious, and, as I hold, the only remedy open to the parties, under the circumstances, to have a direction from that Court as to the offerings laid before the deity.

I may add that, though we have not been able to deal with the plaintiff's claim in this suit on the merits, it is clear that the money, which the Garavs are said to have wrongfully taken, must ultimately be liable to be distributed in accordance with the direction which the District Court may give as to the disposal of the offerings made before the deity generally and as to the particular amount in question. I also desire to make it clear that, merely because the funds belong, in the first instance, to the temple, it does not follow that the hereditary pujaris may not have a right as such to the whole or any part of this fund. That is a matter which must be decided on evidence by the District Court on a proper application. The view taken by the lower Courts on this point must not be taken to have been accepted by this Court.

In the result, I would affirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court except as to costs. Having regard to the view which we have taken of this case and to the positions taken up by the parties to this litigation, we think that each party should bear his own costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.

Fawcett, J. C.—The following genealogical tree shows the relationship of the parties to the suit out of which this appeal arises:—

The plaintiff, Dowlatram, sued for partition of his share of property formerly possessed by his grand-mother, Hemibai, and great-grand mother, Vinjibai. His suit has been dismissed except in regard to one property, of which the defendant, Naraindas, admitted his right to partition. He appeals in regard to the other properties.

The property alleged to have been left by Hemibai consists of a shop and certain ornaments. The shop came to her on a partition made between Pritamdas and his two sons, Menghraj and Naraindas, which was effected by a decree passed upon an award. Hemibai has admittedly executed a Will, by which she left this property to the defendant's son, Bhagwandas, and the main question arising is, whether Hemibai had power to dispose of the shop by Will in this way. It is quite clear that, as ruled by the Privy Council in Debi Mangal Prasad Singh v. Mahadeo Prasad Singh (1), immoveable property obtained by a widow on partition reverts on her death to the next heirs of her husband, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, at the time of the partition. In the present case Hemibai was not a widow, but the property was awarded to her for maintenance charges and the same principle would apply. It is contended by the appellant's Pleader that the award debars Hemibai from willing away the property, while respondent's Counsel urges that it confers upon her an absolute estate. The award, paragraph 6, runs as follows:—

"The following property is awarded to defendant No. 3 Musammot Hemibai, wife of Massand Pritamdas, for the expenses of her maintenance and Dins payable to the daughters and sisters of the parties' father and other expenses for keeping up family status. By reason of her getting it she will continue to defray her maintenance charges herself and she will continue to pay Dins to the daughters and sisters of the parties' fathers and other expenses for maintaining status of the family. Other parties will have no concern with that nor will the other parties have any right, interest or claim or interference in the property awarded to her.

"(1) Ornaments which Musammot Hemibai wears on her person and the ornaments which Musammot Pissandbai, wife of Massand Malram, had given her at the time of death—all these ornaments awarded to Musammot Hemibai now belong to her. Other parties have no right or interest therein.

DOWLATRAM V. NARAINDAAS.

Shikarpur, in this side of the office of Town Inspector, which shop is occupied by Kodumal walad Pamandas, physician, as a tenant. This shop is wholly awarded to Musammatt Hemibai with all rights and interests and it belongs to her and will remain in her possession and enjoyment.

"(3) This property is awarded to Musammatt Hemibai on this condition that whatever property is left out of the said property at the time of her death will be appropriated in equal halves by Mengbraj and Naraindas between themselves.

"(4) If Musammatt Hemibai gives her property to one son the other son will get divided half (of the property) from his brother."

And it is also to be noted that, with regard to the property awarded to Pritamdas, it was provided as follows:—

"As regards the property awarded to defendant No. 1, Massand Pritamdas, he has full powers as, for an instance, if he chooses to transfer the property in any way during his lifetime or to gift it in charity or to spend it, he is competent to do so, except that if he gives away his property to one son his other son will recover from him half (the property)."

Reading these provisions in their ordinary grammatical meaning, it is, I think, quite clear that the arbitrators were anxious that neither the father nor the mother should show any preference to either of the two sons and provision was accordingly made that, if either the father or the mother gave property to one of the sons, the other son had a right to recover half of it from his brother. Sub paragraph (3) of paragraph 6 also contains a clear provision that whatever property was left to Hemibai out of that awarded should go to the two sons in equal halves. And this is made a condition on which the property was awarded to her. Mr. Isardas for the respondents contends that the first part of paragraph 6 confers an absolute estate upon Hemibai and that the subsequent clause, so far as it purports to restrict that estate, should be treated as repugnant to the grant and, therefore, invalid, in accordance with the well-known rule of construction referred to in Goverdhandas v. Venattai (2). In support of the contention he refers to the use of the words 'milkiat' and 'kabzo', and argues that this virtually is equivalent to saying that Hemibai was the malik of the property, which expression usually confers a heritable alienable estate. As a matter of fact, Hemibai is not described as a malik and I do not think that the mere use of the words 'malikiat' or 'kabzo' can be said to amount to the same thing, and even had she been described as malik, yet the rule that this confers an heritable and alienable estate is one which applies only in the absence of indication of a different intention, as is pointed out in Goverdhandas' case (2), at page 216. The leading case is that of Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (3), in which it was held that the use of the word malik implies "absolute ownership" unless there is anything in the context or surrounding circumstances to qualify such a meaning, and that it was not so qualified by the fact that the donee was a widow. But in this case there is a good deal more. The express provision in sub-paragraph (3) of paragraph 6 of the award is a clear qualification of the otherwise absolute estate conferred upon Hemibai. And it is, in my opinion, a valid and reasonable condition attached to the estate conferred upon her by the award. The estate conferred is, in fact, an absolute estate only during her lifetime. Hemibai could not, therefore, will any of this property to Mengbraj or Naraindas so as to confer it on either of them, except to confer it on them in equal halves.

The question, therefore, now arises whether the bequest to Naraindas' son, Bhagwandas comes within this qualification of her estate. No doubt it does not do so, if the words are read only as they literally stand. But in construing the award, just as in construing the Will of a Hindu, it is not improper to take into consideration what are known to the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus with respect to the devolution of property. See Moulvie Mahamed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (4) cited in Motilal v. Advocate-General of Bombay (5). The ordinary rule of Hindu Law is, that a grandson whose father is dead, is on the same footing as a son in regard to the inheritance to the separate property of his grandfather by virtue of the doctrine of representation: cf. Mulla's Principles of Hindu Law, Second Edition, page 18, and Gour's Indian Hindu Code, page 938. There can, in my opinion, be no reasonable doubt that the arbitrators intended that the names Menghraj and Naraindas should include any descendants of theirs. They are on the same footing under this rule of representation. And it would be virtually assenting to a fraud to allow the contention that the Will of Hemibai does not offend this condition because it leaves the property to Bhagwandas instead of to his father Naraindas. Bhagwandas, it may be noted, is a minor, and the virtual possession and ownership will be with Naraindas, at any rate, for many years. He thereby obtains a benefit at the expense of his brother's son which is opposed to the award. Accordingly, I differ from the finding of the lower Court that, in consequence of Hemibai's Will, the plaintiff was not entitled to a share in the shop. Under the conditions contained in the award the plaintiff, Doulatram, stands in the shoes of Menghraj and is entitled to a half share in this property.

The plaintiff also claims a share in certain ornaments alleged to have been left by Hemibai and to have been taken possession of by the defendant, Naraindas. The Subordinate Judge has held that there is no satisfactory evidence that such ornaments were in existence when Hemibai died, and that they are in defendant's possession. I can see no reason to differ from this finding of fact. No doubt, it is clear from the award that Hemibai had ornaments. But the plaintiff has not proved that they were still with her at her death. The witness Hemandas speaks only to seeing ornaments on her person two or four years before her death. Mohandas, similarly, to one year before her death and Shewaram to four and four-and-a-half years ago, which would be about three years before her death. There is also evidence that, at any rate, some of the ornaments had been sold. The only evidence of defendant's possession is that of the plaintiff, Doulatram, which is uncorroborated, although he mentions that certain witnesses were present when he was beaten by the defendant. It may be difficult for the plaintiff to adduce evidence, but at the same time this in itself will not justify us in holding his allegation proved. Accordingly, I see no reason to differ from the view taken by the lower Court on this part of the case.

The remaining property is a house, which plaintiff alleged had been willed to him by his great-grand-mother Vinjibai. The original Will was not produced and was alleged to be in possession of the defendant. The lower Court held that the Will was not proved and that the copy of it that was produced was inadmissible in evidence. Mr. Rupchand for the appellant has not been able to show us any evidence that the original Will was in the defendant's possession or that other circumstances existed which would enable the Court to admit secondary evidence of it. Nor has the plaintiff adduced all the evidence that seems available in regard to the actual execution of the Will. Thus, neither the writer nor any of the alleged attesting witnesses have been called. It is, no doubt, probable that such a Will was executed, as it is referred to in a receipt (Exhibit 59) purporting to have been signed by the defendant. The defendant also is very vague both in his written statement and in his evidence in disputing its existence. But this will not suffice to excuse the plaintiff from proving the essentials for admitting secondary evidence of the Will. I can see no sufficient reason for differing from the lower Court's decision on this point.

Mr. Rupchand for the appellant contended, however, that the plaintiff is, under general Hindu Law, entitled to a half share of this house independently of any bequest by Vinjibai. No issue was raised on this point in the lower Court; but the claim is made in paragraph 3 of the plaint, and as it is a point which does not necessitate further enquiry as to the facts, it can, I think, be taken in appeal; cf. Begam v. Topanmal (6) and Bherumal Teckchand v. Duklanomal (7). The point is also referred in the memorandum of appeal. It appears that Vinjibai obtained this property as the widow of Lilaram, and upon her death it vested in the daughter Hemibai, as her absolute property and became, therefore, her Stridhan; Chinku v. Utamchand (8); Gaur's Hindu Code, sections 25 and 2, page 1086. Mr. Rupchand contends that, even so, it descends to her sons, etc., as if she were a male, and that, accordingly, the plaintiff, as a great grand son of Lilaram, is entitled to succeed to it simultaneously with his uncle under the ordinary doctrine of representation which has already been alluded to. In support of this contention, he cites Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, sections 618-9 at pages 863 and 864, and Budha Singh v. Lattu Singh (9) and Ranchandra Martand v. Vinayak Venkatesh (10). The passage in Mayne is based on Mr. Justice West's judgment in Vijayaragam v. Lakshuman (11). The view there taken that, under the Vyavahara Mayukha, stridhan acquired by inheritance descends, on the woman's death, to her sons and the rest, as if she were a male, is based on Chapter IV, section X B1 26 of that work (see at page 260). This text has been held by the Bombay High Court only to give precedence to sons and rest "over daughters and the rest" in the case of inheritance to non technical stridhan, and not to authorize a devolution to the heirs of their last male owner: Manilal Rewadat v. Bai Rewa (12). The view propounded by Mr. Mayne has there been expressly dissented from. The Bombay High Court has also refused to reconsider its former decisions, even though some Privy Council rulings weaken them, on this principle of stare decisis: cf. Bhau v. Raghunath Krishna (13), Gulappa v. Tayawa (14) and Dhondi v. Radhabai (15). Finally, it has held, on the exact point now arising, and on a consideration of the text of the Mayukha, which was the basis of Mr. West's judgment, that the non-technical stridhan of a Hindu female governed by the Vyavahara Mayukha descends to her son in priority to her son's son: Rai Raman v. Jigjivandas Kashidas (16). That case, it may be noted, like this one was concerning the property inherited by a daughter from her father and the two Privy Council rulings relied on by Mr. Rupchand had been cited in argument (see at pages 620 and 622*). As stated in the arguments in that case (page 622*), the modern text-writers treat succession to a stridhan as going not collectively but consecutively to sons, grandsons and great grandsons. The judgment also gives reasons which, seem weighty, for not applying the doctrine of representation in such a case. This view assimilates the Mayukha Law to the Mitakshara Law in the case of both technical and non technical stridhan (see at page 623*). It has been held in Chinku v. Utamchand (8) that, where a rule of succession among Hindus has been declared to be of general authority in the Bombay Presidency, it should be held to be the rule also in Sind, except where an invariable and ancient special usage is alleged and proved by him who avers it. Whether, therefore, the Mitakshara or the Mayukha is to be followed, it seems to me clear that the property on Hemibai's death devolved on the son, Narainda, in preference to the grandson, Dowlatram, and that the latter is not entitled to succeed to it simultaneously with his uncle, Narainda. I hold, therefore, that the plaintiff is not entitled to a partition of a half share in this property.

I would, therefore, allow the appeal only in regard to the shop, which is Item No. 2 of Schedule A to the plaint, and vary the lower Court's decree by including this property in the properties of which the plaintiff is entitled to get a half share on partition from the defendant. As the appellant has been partly successful, I would also allow him half his costs of appeal.

KEMP, A. J. C.—I agree.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1942), s 55—Sale—Portion of sale-consideration left with vendee to pay vendor's mortgagee—Mortgagee not paid—Charge, creation of—Vendor's lien, enforceability of.

A. sold certain property to B, leaving with him a portion of the sale consideration for payment to C, who held a mortgage of the property from A. Subsequently, D. brought a suit for pre-emption and acquired the property from B, but neither he nor B, made any payment to C, who brought a suit to enforce his mortgage by sale of the property and obtained a decree. A. satisfied this decree and brought the present suit to recover the money paid by him by sale of the property:

Held, that B and D. having acquired the property with notice of the mortgage to C, the amount due on that mortgage formed a charge on the property under section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act, and as the amount due was paid by A he was entitled to enforce his lien against the property in the hands of D.

First appeal from the order of the Second Additional Subordinate Judge, Basti, dated the 17th of December 1919.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of the lower Appellate Court :—

"On 6th June 1912 plaintiff appellant executed a sale-deed for Rs. 999 in favour of the ancestors of defendants, second party. Rs. 201 out of the sale consideration was left in the hands of the purchasers for payment to defendant, third party, on account of a mortgage, dated 28th July 1909. Defendants, first party, acquired the property in suit by right of pre-emption through Court by filing a suit against defendants, second party. Neither the original purchasers nor the pre-emptors paid the money due to defendant, third party, on account of his mortgage referred to above. Defendants, third party, therefore, sued the plaintiff and obtained a decree for sale of the mortgaged property on foot of his mortgage. Thereupon plaintiff executed a mortgage, dated 20th December 1918, for Rs. 403.15-0 in favour of defendant, third party, and satisfied the decree. He then brought this suit for recovery of the said amount by sale of the property which had been sold to the ancestors of defendants, second party, and which was now in the hands of defendant, first party.

"Plaintiff claimed to be entitled to a charge on the property sold under section 55, clause (4) (b) for the amount in question. The learned Munsif, relying on Gur Dayal Singh v. Karam Singh (1) and Abhulla Beary v. Mammali Beary (2), held that there was an agreement between the vendor and the vendees for payment of a portion of the consideration to a creditor of the vendor that the defendants (vendees and the pre-emptors) having failed to pay the said money. There was a breach of contract on the part of defendants for which plaintiff could sue them for damages, and that the amount in question not being payable to the plaintiff there could be no charge in his favour. He, therefore, dismissed the suit, hence this appeal.

"The question for determination is, whether there can be a charge in favour of the plaintiff, under the circumstances given above or not, and whether it can be enforced against defendant. The leading case on the point is Webb v. Macpherson (3). It is an authority for the proposition that the seller can enforce the charge mentioned in section 55, clause (4) (b), against the property in the hands of a subsequent purchaser who has notice of the fact that the purchase-money in the first transfer or some part of it has not been paid.

"It cannot be denied in this case that defendants, first party, (who acquired the property in question through Court by pre-emption) had notice of the fact that the mortgage, money due to defendant, third party, which was left in deposit with the vendees) had not been paid. If there is a charge it can, therefore, be enforced against defendants, first party. It is contended on behalf of defendants that the agreement in this case was to pay not to the vendor but to the creditor of the vendor; that the charge created by the Statute in favour of the vendor in only securing for purchase-money payable to him, and that a contract to the contrary arises by implication to negative the statutory charge. This view was taken by the Madras High Court in Abdulla Beary v. Mammali Beary (2), but in that case there was a distinct stipulation that, upon the failure of the vendee to discharge the liabilities of the seller, he shall be liable for any damages resulting from such default. There is no such stipulation in the sale-deed in suit in this case. The Hon'ble Sir Sunder Lal, J., expressed some doubt about the correctness of the interpretation put upon the sale-deed by the Madras High Court. Assuming the interpretation to be correct, there is no such stipulation in the sale-deed in suit as there was in the case reported as Abdulla Beary v. Mammali Beary (2). That case is, therefore, not in point. The Hon'ble Sir Sunder Lal, on page 1038, XII A. L. J. [Megh Raj Vaish v. Abdullah Khan (4)] in a case similar to the present case observed: 'Under the terms of the sale-deed in suit, it is not possible to say that the money was not payable to the plaintiffs. It was at the plaintiffs' request left in the hands of the vendee to pay for and on behalf of the vendors and in that sense the money was payable to the vendors and they had a lien for the money so long as it was not paid.'

"In a similar case, reported as Har Ohand v. Kishori Singh (5), it was held that the fact that the money was left with the vendee for payment to a creditor of the vendor was in no way inconsistent with the continuance of the lien.

(4) 25 Ind. Cas. 203; 12 A. L. J. 1034 at p. 1038.

(5) 7 Ind. Cas. 639.

"Following the above rulings, I am of opinion that there was a charge in favour of the plaintiff for the money remaining unpaid by the defendants. The ruling reported as Gur Dayal Singh v. Karam Singh (1) is distinguishable, in that the subsequent transferees in that case were held to have had no notice of the unpaid purchase money. As the lower Court has dismissed the suit on a preliminary point the decree of the lower Court is reversed. I remand the suit with direction to re-admit the suit on its original number and to proceed to determine it according to law. The appellant will have his costs of this appeal from respondents, first party."

Mr. Inwar Saran, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This order was clearly right. We cannot improve upon the admirable judgment of the lower Appellate Court. There is obviously a serious question as to whether the plaintiff can establish a charge for more than Rs. 201. The only ground upon which he suggests it in his plaint, being an allegation of negligence on the part of the defendants, in paragraph 6. But in this case notice is clearly found, and in the authorities relied upon there was no notice. Great reliance has been placed upon the decision in the case of Gur Dayal Singh v. Karam Singh (1) in which case there was no notice, and particularly upon the dictum contained on page 260* of the judgment, where it was said that in a case where by an agreement part of the consideration is left in the hands of the vendee to pay a creditor, such agreement and the money payable thereunder is not "unpaid purchase-money." That dictum was not necessary for the decision of that case, and we think that probably, at some future date, it will require further consideration. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 20—Interest, payment of, as such—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 2 (1)—Decree payable by instalments—Application for execution—Decree-holder, whether can certify payment of interest as such.

Where the holder of a decree payable by instalments applies for execution thereof, it is open to him to extend the period of limitation under section 20 of the Limitation Act, by entering in his execution application, a payment on account of interest as such towards all overdue instalments. [p. 936, col. 1]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Larkana.

Mr. Nihalchand Tikamdas, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

KEMP, A. J. C.—Plaintiff-respondent obtained an instalment-decree against defendant-appellant for Rs. 400, payable thus:—

Rs. 50 on 1st January 1911, with interest at Rs. 1 per cent. per mensem.

Rs. 50 on 1st June 1911.

Rs. 50 on 1st January 1912.

Rs. 50 on 1st June 1912.

Rs. 50 on 1st January 1913, and the balance of Rs. 150 on 1st June 1913.

For interest on the last Rs. 350 the plaintiff was to receive the Batai of the defendant's land up to the Rabi crop of 1912-13. If default was made in the payment of any instalment, interest on the overdue amount was to be paid at Rs. 1 per cent. per mensem.

The first instalment of 1st January 1911, with interest at Rs. 1 per cent. per mensem, was duly paid. It is unnecessary to consider whether the provision for interest at Rs. 1 per cent. per mensem on default of payment in any instalment over and above the receipt of Batai as interest was a penalty under section 74 of the Contract Act because no such point appears to have been taken in either of the lower Courts.

None of the instalments after 1st January 1911 were paid, but the plaintiff received the Batai up to the Rabi crop of 1914-15.

On 1st January 1915 plaintiff applied for execution. On that date the instalments of 1st June 1911 and 1st January 1912 were barred, unless limitation could be saved by payment of interest under section 20, Limitation Act. But the receipt of Batai, after default in payment of the instalment of 1st June 1911, cannot be regarded as payment of interest as such towards that instalment, because the intention of the parties seems to have been that the Batai was to represent the interest due on the balance of the debt after each instalment had been paid until the discharge of the whole judgment-debt, and interest on any instalment in arrears was provided for by the stipulation for interest at Rs. 1 per cent. per mensem on any such overdue instalment. As nothing but Batai was received, it appears that no interest in money was paid on the barred instalments before they became barred. This is also the view of the lower Appellate Court.

But the plaintiff received extra Batai for 1913-14 and 1914-15 admittedly against the interest due on the two overdue instalments of 1st June 1911 and 1st January 1912. This extra Batai was interest paid as such under section 20, Limitation Act. The plaintiff sought to have it taken into account to extend the period of limitation by mentioning the receipt of this extra Batai in his execution application.

Now the question as to whether a decree-holder can certify a payment mentioned in his execution application generally arises in one of two cases,—

(1) When he seeks to certify the payment as one made against an instalment payable under a decree made payable by instalments with a clause that this whole amount is to become due on failure to pay one or more instalments.

(2) When he seeks to certify the payment in order to extend the period of limitation under section 20, Limitation Act, in respect of an instalment that would otherwise be barred.

Shafi Mahomed v. Choithram (1) was an instance of the former case, and being a

(1) 52 Ind. Ca. 504; 13 S. L. R. 37.

PAHLUMAL SEWANMAL v. SIDIK, decision of a Full Bench of this Court settles the law so far as this Province is concerned. It is unnecessary to cite authorities from other Courts on this point.

The present case comes under the second head. Here the decree-holder does not, by seeking to certify, ask the Court to say from what date limitation runs but essays to bring time barred instalments within time by invoking the assistance of section 20, Limitation Act. As to whether he can do this we have the decision in Narsoomal v. Tirathmal (2) against him. Nevertheless, the binding force of that decision is weakened by the subsequent remarks of the same Judges in the later case in Shafi Mahomed v. Choithram (1).

It is settled by the decision in Shafi Mahomed v. Choithram (1) that the application to certify may be admitted from the mention of the fact of the payments in the decree-holder's execution application. Can the decree-holder take advantage of payments uncertified before his application for execution to prolong the period of limitation? According to the decisions in Kutubullah Sarkar v. Durga Oharan Rudra (3) and Bhajan Lall v. Oheda Lall (4) he cannot. But the Calcutta High Court, in another case of Eusuffeman Sarkar v. Sanchia Lal (5), allowed the decree holder to extend the period of limitation under section 20, Limitation Act, by entering a payment on account of interest as such in his execution application. See also the Madras High Court's decision in Rijam Aiyar v. Anantharatnam Aiyar (6). Apparently the cases of Kutubullah Sarkar v. Durga Oharan Rudra (3) and Bhajan Lall v. Oheda Lall (4) were not cited before the learned Judges who decided Eusuffeman Sarkar v. Sanchia Lal (5). Nevertheless, the last mentioned case is reported in an unauthorized report and has, therefore, the weight to be attached to such reports.

There thus seems to be considerable conflict of opinion as to whether the execution creditor may, by entering payments in his execution application, extend the period of limitation under section 20, Limitation Act. From one point of view it seems desirable that he should not be allowed to do so, because of the opportunity it would open for fraud on his part. He might be tempted to make no mention of such payments in the hope that, if the judgment-debtor paid the decretal amount before the period of limitation for an execution application ended, he could conceal such payments from the Court. On the other hand, there is an obligation on him to enter such payments in his execution application under Order XXI, rule 2 (1), and it seems unjust to assume he has fraudulent intention if he does not certify them as soon as they are made. If he does mention the payments in his execution application, the wording of Order XXI, rule 2 (1) makes it obligatory on the Court to record them. Nor is it alleged in the present case that the decree-holder has been guilty of any intended fraud in not certifying the extra Batai when it was received against interest on the overdue instalments.

There is no period of limitation within which the decree-holder must certify the payment, and I am, therefore, of opinion, this appeal must be allowed.

Fawcett, J. C.—I agree that the appeal should be allowed.

The circumstances are such that it can be reasonably inferred that the extra Batai for 1913-14 and 1914-15 was intended by the parties to cover interest due on the two instalments of 1st June 1911 and 1st January 1912; nor does any contention to the contrary appear to have been raised in either of the lower Courts.

The only point for determination is, whether non-certification of the payments within the prescribed period of limitation (3 years) prevents section 20 of the Limitation Act operating in favour of the decree-holder. In view of the judgments in Shafi Mahomed v. Choithram (1) the decision in Narsoomal v. Tirathmal (2) can no longer be treated as good and binding. It was distinctly dissented from by Pratt, J. C., and Crouch, A. J. C., and I resiled from the main reasoning on which it was based. No doubt, I also put forward the view in Shafi Mahomed v. Choithram (1) at pages 49-51* that a payment or adjustment on which a decree-holder relies for showing that his application for execution is within time must be certified by him before the question whether such payment or adjustment should be recognised first comes before the Court executing the decree. But in this case the certifying was made before the question came before the Court and not after the application for execution on which the question of recognition arose. Therefore, this view does not come in the way of recognising the payments which are in question in this

The Calcutta and Madras High Courts have in Eusuffzaman Sarkar v. Sanchia Lal (5) and Masilamani Mudaliar v. Sethuswami Aiyar (7), and in other cases there followed, ruled that a payment that is first mentioned in an execution application presented within 3 years from the date of such payment, is sufficiently certified under Order XXI, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, and will operate to save limitation under section 20 of the Limitation Act. In view of the adoption by this Court of the general principle that a decree-holder can certify a payment at any time, I think these decisions must be followed by us, in preference to that of the Allahabad High Court in Bhaan Lal v. Okeda Lal (4).

We, therefore, reverse the lower Appellate Court's decree and restore the order of the Sub-Judge, holding that the two instalments of 1st June 1911 and 1st January 1912 are not time-barred. The respondents must bear appellant's costs in this and the District Court.

The ordinary form of sanad granted to the Oudh Taluqdars provides that, in the event of the grantee or any of his "successors" dying intestate, the estate shall descend to the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture:

Held, that "successors" in this connection is equivalent to heirs, i. e., is confined to those who succeed to the estate by virtue of the grant and does not include those who take the whole or part thereof through alienation. [p. 94, cols. 1 & 2.]

Consolidated appeals from a decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, (Stuart, A. J. O. and Kanhaiya Lal, A. J. O.), dated July 5, 1915, reported as 31 Ind. Cas., 748, affirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Mohanlalganj.

FACTS.—The main question raised by this appeal, and the only one decided by the Board, was whether or not, on the true construction of the Sanad in the case, which was in the ordinary form of primogeniture Sanad, the rule of primogeniture therein provided, applied to all persons who came into possession of the estate.

The facts are sufficiently stated in their Lordships' judgment. The two rival claimants were the first born son of a daughter and the son of the eldest daughter respectively. Their suits were both dismissed by the lower Courts.

Mr. De Gruyther, K. O. and Mr. E. B. Rastres, for the Appellants in first appeal.

governed by the sanad. This is not settled by Thakur Sheo Singh v. Raghubans Kunwar (1). That case shows that the sanad establishes a permanent rule of succession and not merely intestate succession. The word "successors" includes successors by devise: it is not limited to intestacy. When these sanads were granted, the intention, as set out at length in Sykes' Compendium of Oadh Taluqdari Law, was to prevent the splitting up of estates. They lay down a rule which is to apply not merely to the original holder, but to his successors.

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—A Muhammadan gentleman might devise to a Hindu money-lender. Would he be a successor?]

I think so.

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—It may be, but I do not think Government could have intended it.]

Here you have the whole estate bequeathed to a member of the family who would at least have got part under the ordinary Muhammadan Law.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—The question was not, it seems, considered in Thakur Sheo Singh v. Raghubans Kunwar (1) (supra), so as a decision to guide us it is of little use.]

"Successor" must at least include the succession to the whole family estate by a member of the family.

Mr. Parikh (who was allowed to follow on the same side).—The Will by which Sughra Bibi bequeathed to Akbar Ali Khan was admittedly made at the instance of the Chief Commissioner. This shows that it was not considered that a devise would defeat the policy of the Government.

Mr. Clauson, K. O., for Respondents Nos. 3 to 6.—There are two points fatal to appellants: (a) "succession" in the sanad means successor ab intestate (b) they cannot show they are male heirs, i. e., males establishing their title through males.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—That second contention might be dangerous for you, as you do not make out your title through males.]

We are in possession and it is for them to prove their own title. As to (a) I say successor means one who comes in by force of the existence of the estate with no interruption. Successor might mean (1) ab intestate, (2) any holder of the estate, (3) something intermediate. Admittedly (2) is impossible, I submit successor cannot include transferees.

(1) 82 I. A. 203; 27 A. 634; 15 M. L. J. 352; 8 O. O. 317; 9 O. W. N. 1009; 2 C. L. J. 194 (P. C.).

One would not expect that the old limitation would apply to quite new people. It is not necessary to bar transfers altogether, but I would suggest that, at all events, a transfer outside the line marked out by the sanad breaks the successory limitation provided therein. Elahi Khanam was outside the circle: on no hypothesis could "heir" include the widow.

Mr. De Gruyther, replied.—Alienate includes adoption, and if any alienation is to break the line of succession, the adopted son would be free from all restrictions and would not be a successor, even though he took on an intestacy. Next, if "successor" had that limited meaning, each grantee could get rid of all limitations by devising to this next heir. The intention was that, till the estate was alienated, it should devolve in the particular way laid down. The sanad should be construed liberally so as to give effect to its true intent.

(The question as to the priority in right inter se of the two appellants was afterwards argued but the arguments are not reported as no decision was given.)

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—These are two consolidated appeals (Nos. 200 and 201 of 1919), arising out of two suits, brought by different plaintiffs for the purpose of determining the rights of succession to a property known as the Maniapur Taluka.

Several subordinate questions arise upon these appeals, but they are dependent upon the success of the appellants in their contention that, according to the true construction of a sanad granted in 1861 to a lady called Sughra Bibi, the rules relating to primogeniture, which that sanad established, apply to all persons who come into possession of the estate, whether by gift, devise, purchase or descent.

The facts which give rise to this dispute can be shortly stated. Sughra Bibi died on the 11th November 1865 having by Will given the whole Talukdari estate to one Akbar Ali Khan, who was the youngest of her four half-brothers. Akbar Ali Khan had no male issue, and, partly by a deed of gift and partly by bequest, he disposed of the whole of the property in favour of his wife Elahi Khanam. She died on the 20th April 1899 leaving six daughters, who are six respondents, and a number of grand-sons by such daughters, of whom Agha Mohammad GHULAM ABBAS KHAN V. AMATUL FATIMA.

Jafar, the appellant in Appeal No. 201 of 1919, is the son of the eldest daughter; Babu Ghulam Abbas Khan, the appellant in the other appeal, being the eldest of the grandsons by a younger daughter. If, according to the true construction of the document, the successors on whom the right of primogeniture is imposed do not include those who being outside the line of descent succeeded by the operation of a devise, the appellants fail; this has been the decision of one of the Judicial Commissioners and of the Subordinate Judge, the other Judicial Commissioner deciding, for other reasons, that the appellants were not entitled.

The relevant terms of the document are as follows:—

"Know all men that whereas by the Proclamation of March, 1858, by His Excellency the Right Hon'ble the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, all proprietary rights in the soil of Oudh, with a few special exceptions, were confiscated and passed to the British Government, which became free to dispose of them as it pleased, I, George Udney Yule, Officiating Chief Commissioner of Oudh, under the authority of His Excellency the Governor-General of India in Council, do hereby confer on you the full proprietary right, title and possession of the estate of Maniarpur. . . . Therefore, this sanad is given you in order that it may be known to all whom it may concern that the above estate has been conferred upon you and your heirs for ever, subject to the payment of such annual revenue as may from time to time be imposed, and to the conditions . . . . It is another condition of this grant that in the event of your dying intestate or of any of your successors dying intestate, the estate shall descend to the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture, but you and all your successors shall have full power to alienate the estate, either in whole or in part, by sale, mortgage, gift, bequest, or adoption to whomsoever you please. It is also a condition of this grant that you will, so far as is in your power, promote the agricultural prosperity of your estate, and that all holding under you shall be secured in the possession of all the subordinate rights they formerly enjoyed. As long as the above obligations are observed by you and your heirs in good faith, so long will the British Government maintain you and your heirs as proprietors of the above-mentioned estate, in confirmation of which I herewith attach my seal and signature."

From this it will be seen that the estate was granted in a form intended to secure the succession of the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture, but that, at the same time, free power of disposition was reserved to all who became possessed of the estate. The construction of the document is rendered difficult by the use of words that have, according to English Law, a well-known meaning and implication which, in the circumstances of the grant, it would not be right to apply without qualification to the document in question. The circumstances in which the grant was made are relevant considerations, and they are fully set out in Sykes' Compendium of Oudh Taluqdari Law, referred to in the judgments of the Subordinate Judge. From this it is apparent, that it was the object of the Government to associate possession of the Taluqdari estate in its entirety in the hands of the Taluqdars, with the honour and dignity of the family whose title should be transmitted to the nearest male heir. It was something remotely akin to an estate in tail male according to English Law but the kinship was not close, because a power of alienation, unknown to an English estate tail, unless the entail is destroyed, was an essential part of the document. The conditions imposed as to loyalty and obedience to the British Government were obviously intended to have reference to those who took under the grant, and this is a relevant consideration in determining what the true meaning of the word "successors" may be, for if it bore the meaning which it is obviously capable of supporting, of any form of succession, it would follow that, whoever bought the estate under any circumstances, would be subject to the same restrictions. If, however, the estate were at any time alienated into the hands of people living in a totally different district and under totally different conditions, the reason for these provisions would at once disappear. Again, "successors," without some limitation, would include all those who succeeded to any part of the estate, and as the power of disposition clearly and in express language contemplates the power of breaking the estate up by the act of any holder for the time governed by the sanad. This is not settled by Thakur Sheo Singh v. Raghubans Kunwar (1). That case shows that the sanad establishes a permanent rule of succession and not merely intestate succession. The word "successors" includes successors by devise: it is not limited to intestacy. When these sanads were granted, the intention, as set out at length in Sykes' Compendium of Oadh Talukdari Law, was to prevent the splitting up of estates. They lay down a rule which is to apply not merely to the original holder, but to his successors.

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—A Muhammadan gentleman might devise to a Hindu money-lender. Would he be a successor?]

I think so.

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—It may be, but I do not think Government could have intended it.]

Here you have the whole estate bequeathed to a member of the family who would at least have got part under the ordinary Muhammadan Law.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—The question was not, it seems, considered in Thakur Sheo Singh v. Raghubans Kunwar (1) (supra), so as a decision to guide us it is of little use.]

"Successor" must at least include the succession to the whole family estate by a member of the family.

Mr. Parikh (who was allowed to follow on the same side).—The Will by which Sughra Bibi bequeathed to Akbar Ali Khan was admittedly made at the instance of the Chief Commissioner. This shows that it was not considered that a devise would defeat the policy of the Government.

Mr. Clauson, R. O., for Respondents Nos. 3 to 6.—There are two points fatal to appellants: (a) "succession" in the sanad means successor ab intestate (b) they cannot show they are male heirs, i. e., males establishing their title through males.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—That second contention might be dangerous for you, as you do not make out your title through males.]

We are in possession and it is for them to prove their own title. As to (a) I say successor means one who comes in by force of the existence of the estate with no interruption. Successor might mean (1) ab intestate, (2) any holder of the estate, (3) something intermediate. Admittedly (2) is impossible, I submit successor cannot include transferees.

(1) 32 I. A. 203; 27 A. 634; 15 M. L. J. 852; 8 O. C. 317; 9 O. W. N. 1009; 2 C. L. J. 194 (P. C.).

One would not expect that the old limitation would apply to quite new people. It is not necessary to bar transfers altogether, but I would suggest that, at all events, a transfer outside the line marked out by the sanad breaks the successory limitation provided therein. Elahi Khanam was outside the circle: on no hypothesis could "heir" include the widow.

Mr. De Gruyther, replied.—Alienate includes adoption, and if any alienation is to break the line of succession, the adopted son would be free from all restrictions and would not be a successor, even though he took on an intestacy. Next, if "successor" had that limited meaning, each grantee could get rid of all limitations by devising to this next heir. The intention was that, till the estate was alienated, it should devolve in the particular way laid down. The sanad should be construed liberally so as to give effect to its true intent.

(The question as to the priority in right inter se of the two appellants was afterwards argued but the arguments are not reported as no decision was given.)

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—These are two consolidated appeals (Nos. 200 and 201 of 1919), arising out of two suits, brought by different plaintiffs for the purpose of determining the rights of succession to a property known as the Maniapur Taluka.

Jafar, the appellant in Appeal No. 201 of 1919, is the son of the eldest daughter; Babu Ghulam Abbas Khan, the appellant in the other appeal, being the eldest of the grandsons by a younger daughter. If, according to the true construction of the document, the successors on whom the right of primogeniture is imposed do not include those who being outside the line of descent succeeded by the operation of a devise, the appellants fail; this has been the decision of one of the Judicial Commissioners and of the Subordinate Judge, the other Judicial Commissioner deciding, for other reasons, that the appellants were not entitled.

The relevant terms of the document are as follows:—

"Know all men that whereas by the Proclamation of March, 1858, by His Excellency the Right Hon'ble the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, all proprietary rights in the soil of Oudh, with a few special exceptions, were confiscated and passed to the British Government, which became free to dispose of them as it pleased, I, George Udney Yule, Officiating Chief Commissioner of Oudh, under the authority of His Excellency the Governor-General of India in Council, do hereby confer on you the full proprietary right, title and possession of the estate of Maniarpur. . . . Therefore, this sanad is given you in order that it may be known to all whom it may concern that the above estate has been conferred upon you and your heirs for ever, subject to the payment of such annual revenue as may from time to time be imposed, and to the conditions . . . As long as the above obligations are observed by you and your heirs in good faith, so long will the British Government maintain you and your heirs as proprietors of the above-mentioned estate, in confirmation of which I herewith attach my seal and signature."

From this it will be seen that the estate was granted in a form intended to secure the succession of the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture, but that, at the same time, free power of disposition was reserved to all who became possessed of the estate. The construction of the document is rendered difficult by the use of words that have, according to English Law, a well-known meaning and implication which, in the circumstances of the grant, it would not be right to apply without qualification to the document in question. The circumstances in which the grant was made are relevant considerations, and they are fully set out in Sykes' Compendium of Oudh Taluqdari Law, referred to in the judgments of the Subordinate Judge. From this it is apparent, that it was the object of the Government to associate possession of the Taluqdari estate in its entirety in the hands of the Taluqdars, with the honour and dignity of the family whose title should be transmitted to the nearest male heir. It was something remotely akin to an estate in tail male according to English Law but the kinship was not close, because a power of alienation, unknown to an English estate tail, unless the entail is destroyed, was an essential part of the document. The conditions imposed as to loyalty and obedience to the British Government were obviously intended to have reference to those who took under the grant, and this is a relevant consideration in determining what the true meaning of the word "successors" may be, for if it bore the meaning which it is obviously capable of supporting, of any form of succession, it would follow that, whoever bought the estate under any circumstances, would be subject to the same restrictions. If, however, the estate were at any time alienated into the hands of people living in a totally different district and under totally different conditions, the reason for these provisions would at once disappear. Again, "successors," without some limitation, would include all those who succeeded to any part of the estate, and as the power of disposition clearly and in express language contemplates the power of breaking the estate up by the act of any holder for the time being, such an event might easily arise and the object of securing an undivided holding in a family whose loyalty was rewarded by security of possession would be defeated. It would, therefore, be unreasonable to assume that the estate, if sold, should be subject in the hands of any purchaser to the conditions which as to descent and loyalty had their origin in circumstances which would no longer apply.

Their Lordships, therefore, reject the view that the word "successors" can in this sanad be subject to the liberal construction for which the appellants contend. But if this view be rejected, the document does not permit any other interpretation of the word except that of succession according to the terms of the sanad itself. The estate is, in the first instance, given to Sughra Bibi and her heirs for ever. The heirs there cannot mean any person outside the line of defined succession, for to such people no such grant was made nor, so far as the grant is concerned, were they contemplated in any way as succeeding. That phrase, therefore, must be taken to mean that the estate was an absolute estate conferred upon the grantee, and it is upon her and her nearest male heir and his nearest male heir and so on in unending succession that the conditions are imposed. The last words of the sanad make this clear:—"As long as the obligations are observed by you and your heirs in good faith, so long will the British Government maintain you and your heirs as proprietors of the above-mentioned estate." That must mean "maintain" the heirs who succeed according to the terms of the grant, because no other heirs as heirs can take the estate. "Successors," therefore, is, in their Lordships' opinion, an inartistic phrase used for the purpose of expressing that, in the event of there being no alienation, those who succeed to the estate by virtue of the grant will succeed subject to the conditions and with the same provision as to succession as the person to whom the grant was originally made.

It is argued that this might enable the whole purpose of the grant to be defeated by any owner for the time being by gift, sale or devise to the person who on his death would be the nearest male heir. This argument is open to the objection that, until the moment of death occurs, it is impossible to say who the nearest male heir will be, so that the selection of the person might be almost impossible. But apart from that, their Lordships think that due effect can be given to the words of the sanad by construing it as meaning that "successors" includes the designated parties who would succeed in the event of intestacy, and that those designated parties escape the obligations of the grant by having acquired the property through other means than succession.

Their Lordships are, therefore, unable to agree with the appellants' contention on the first point which this appeal raises, and, in these circumstances, the other questions do not arise for determination. They will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that these appeals should be dismissed. The 3rd, 4th, 5th and 6th respondents will have one set of costs only. There will be no other order as to costs.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Mr. Justice Fletcher in a suit for recovery of money due on a promissory note.

On the 28th August 1912, the defendant firm executed a promissory-note in favour of B. N. Das and Co. in the following terms:

"On demand I promise to pay to B. N. Das and Company or order the sum of Rs. 2,500 only, with interest thereon at the rate of 12 per cent per annum till the date of realisation, for value received in cash."

On or about the 10th January 1914 B. N. Das & Co., for valuable consideration, endorsed the promissory-note in favour of the plaintiff Bank. Notice was duly given by the plaintiff Bank to the defendant firm, but as no payment was made in response to repeated demands, the Bank instituted this suit on the 27th August 1915. The defendant firm urged that the Bank were not bona fide holders in due course and for value, and that the note had been discharged by the firm before the endorsement to the Bank. Mr. Justice Fletcher has overruled these contentions and has decreed the suit.

The evidence leaves no room for doubt that, at the date of the endorsement, B. N. Das & Co. were heavily indebted to the Bank and that the Bank were endorsees for value. This, indeed, would be the presumption under section 118, clause (a) of the Negotiable Instruments Act (1881). Section 9 shows that the Bank became holders in due course if they obtained the note before the amount became payable and without having sufficient cause to believe that any defect existed in the title of the person from whom they derived title. There can be no question, we think, that the Bank acted in good faith and the controversy has centred round the question, when did the amount mentioned in the promissory note become payable? Mr. Aveloom has contended that the promissory-note became payable from the moment of execution and has relied upon the decision in Brojendro Kishore v. Hindustan Co operative Insurance Society (1). In our opinion, that case is clearly distinguishable. There it was ruled that, for purposes of the law of limitation, a note payable on demand is a present debt and is due and payable at once without demand. As explained in Norton v. Ellam (2), Kowe v. Young (3), Maltby v. Murrells (4), no demand is necessary before bringing an action upon a note payable on demand, because its payment is a duty which attaches the moment the loan is given and the note is made. To put the matter differently, the creditor cannot extend the period of limitation by omission to make a demand, and time runs against him from the date of the note, on the principle that the cause of action arises instantly on the loan and the contract on the note is in a state of being broken perpetually. Clearly, these principles have no application to a case under section 9 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. The true rule applicable is that, where a note payable on demand is negotiated, it is not deemed to be overdue, for the purpose of affecting the holder with defects of title, of which he had no notice, by reason that it appears that a reasonable time for presenting it for payment has elapsed since its issue. In Brooks v. Mitchell (5) Baron Parke observed: "if a promissory-note payable on demand is after a certain time to be treated as overdue, although payment has not been demanded, it is no longer a negotiable instrument. But a promissory-note payable on demand is intended to be a continuing security; it is quite unlike the case of a cheque which is intended to be presented speedily." The Court accordingly overruled the contention based on the analogy of the rule applicable to the decision of the question of limitation. Similarly, in Barough v. White (6), Bayley, J., observed that the fact that the note was made payable with interest implied that it would be in negotiation for sometime. The same view was adopted by the Court of Appeal in Glascock

Inasmuch as section 15 of the Arbitration Act, subject to certain requirements, makes an award itself directly enforceable, as if it were a decree of the Court, an application to execute the award, is not an application in execution of an order within the meaning of section 22 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. Appeal from the order of Mr. E. Raymond, Additional Judicial Commissioner, Sind.

Mr. Tahilram Maniram, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

FAWCETT, J. C.—In this case, on the 14th of November 1918, an award was passed in favour of the respondents Udhavdas and others against the appellants or their predecessors-in-title. The respondents are seeking to have the immoveable property belonging to the appellants sold in execution of the award. And the appellants have raised the objection that, as they are agriculturists, this immoveable property is exempted from attachment and also under section 22 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. This contention has been rejected by the lower Court on the ground that section 22 is inapplicable, and we are now asked to decide in appeal whether this conclusion is correct.

It is admitted by Mr. Tahilram for the appellants that the immoveable property is not being sought to be attached and sold in execution of any decree, but he contends that it is in execution of an order within the meaning of section 22. This contention is based on the fact that before an award under the Indian Arbitration Act becomes enforceable, as if it were a decree of the Court, there must be an order of the Court allowing it to remain filed. He urges that it is the act of the Court in recognising and accepting its filing which gives the award its enforceability. Mr. Kimatrai for the respondents, on the other hand, relies on the fact that section 15 of the Indian Arbitration Act plainly says that an award on being filed in accordance with the provisions of the Act, becomes enforceable as if it were a decree, unless it is remitted or set aside. In deciding between these two contentions, I think that, as section 22 is in restriction of the ordinary right of a decree-holder to recover his decretal debt by attachment and sale, it must be strictly construed. We must also have regard to the fact that, under section 74, the Civil Procedure Code applies to the proceedings under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act except so far as it is inconsistent with it. Now, no doubt, an order by the Court that an award shall stand filed is an "order" within the wide definition of that word contained in section 2 (14) of the Civil Procedure Code, for it is the formal expression of a decision of Civil Court which is not a decree, vis., the decision that any objections which may have been taken to the award are unsubstantial or insufficient, and that, therefore, the Court will not interfere with the filing of the award that has already been done. But it does not follow that, when section 22 speaks of an "order" it uses the word in this wide sense. The word must, in my opinion, be read with the preceding words "in execution of", and so read, I think it must be limited to an order capable of execution in the ordinary way. Section 36 of the Civil Procedure Code applies the provisions of the Code relating to the execution of decrees to the execution of orders, and any person who wants to execute an order, has, therefore, to make an application under Order XXI, rule 11, asking the Court's assistance to execute the order which he seeks to get executed. But, as already mentioned, section 15 of the Indian Arbitration Act, subject to certain requirements, makes the award itself directly enforceable, as if it were a decree of the Court, and in view of that provision the application would be to execute the award and not the Court's order letting it remain filed. Nor do I agree with Mr. Tabilram's contention that the enforceability of the award is derived not from filing of the award but from a subsequent order of the Court accepting its filing. Accordingly, I think, an application to execute the award in such a case cannot be deemed to be an application as in execution of an order within the meaning of section 22, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. No doubt, if the Court in passing its order also directs the costs of filing the award to be paid by a certain party, then a person seeking to recover those costs by attachment and sale of immoveable property would be seeking execution of an order, within the meaning of section 22. There are also, of course, many other cases of orders under the Civil Procedure Code which would come within the scope of that section; and my decision is strictly limited to an award under the Arbitration Act. I am, therefore, of opinion that the appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

KENNEDY, A. J. C.—I agree.

INSOLVENCY JURISDICTION.

April 6, 1920.

Present :—Mr. Justice Rankin.

In re A. A. HAILES—INSOLVENT.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), s. 21—Adjudication, application to annul—Debt, payment of, what amounts to.

Where an insolvent applies under section 21 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, to have his adjudication annulled, he must satisfy the Court that he has paid his creditors such sum as would have been a complete discharge in respect of those debts had there been no bankruptcy at all; that is to say, he must show that he has not only paid up all his debts but that he has paid interest up to the date of payment on such of them as carried interest.

Babu Subodh Chandra Mitter, (Attorney), for the Insolvent.

Mr. S. N. Bannerjee, for the Creditor.

JUDGMENT.—In this case I think that, as it is admitted that the creditor who appears as respondent to dispute the right of the insolvent to have an annulment of adjudication under section 21, is a creditor upon a judgment which carries interest at 6 per cent., the insolvent has not brought himself within the language of section 21 unless he satisfies me that he has paid to the creditor, being a creditor in respect of a debt which was proved, such sum as would have been a complete discharge to him in respect of that debt, had there been no bankruptcy at all. Under section 21 the position is, that an insolvent is entitled to claim a right which the section gives him, if it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the debts of the insolvent are paid in full. It is true that the right is not an absolute right because the insolvent may have mis-conducted himself to such an extent that even then the Court may have discretion to refuse it. Apart from any such consideration as that, a person who can say that his debts are paid in full ought no longer to be subject to the control and his estate ought no longer to be subject to the administration of the Court. But such a person coming to the Court in the middle of a pending bankruptcy and asking the Court to determine his bankruptcy must show, independently of any rights given to him by the Bankruptcy Act, that he has paid off his creditors as one man pays another, apart from the Bankruptcy Court altogether. He is asking the Court to bring the bankruptcy to a sudden stop because it is no longer necessary. In my opinion, the only person who is in that position is the person who has made such a payment as could be pleaded between two ordinary parties as amounting to a complete discharge of the debt. In this case

there is a judgment-creditor who has an interest carrying judgment. If there had been no insolvency, it is perfectly clear that the payments made would only have been payments on account, and would not have discharged the liability under the judgment. That being so, it does not seem to me that this insolvent has brought himself within the terms of section 21. The matter may be illustrated in this way. For this purpose I know nothing and require to know nothing about the state of the assets in the bankruptcy. There may be a surplus—there might be a very large surplus—capable of being handed over to the insolvent. If there were, that would not be a good reason for refusing to him an annulment of the bankruptcy if, in other circumstances, he would have been entitled to it, yet in such case it is quite clear that if the bankruptcy goes on, the creditor would get not only interest upto the date of receiving order but interest upto the date of payment and he might even get interest at one of the higher postponed rates right up to the date of payment. That right could be defeated if, by merely paying interest up to adjudication, an insolvent were entitled to have the bankruptcy set aside. That seems to me to be contrary to the principle and intention of the Insolvency Act. I think that, for the present purpose, the man who is claiming to set aside the adjudication altogether, must be taken just as if the onus was on him to show that, independently of the insolvency, he had cleared off this debt and satisfied the creditor in question in full. I do not think I need consider whether "debts" includes debts other than those which have been proved or whether interest due upon them comes within this section. I am dealing here solely with debts in respect of which proofs have been lodged and admitted. With respect to such debts I think section 21 involves that complete payment discharging the debt has been made. For these reasons, I do not think that this applicant has brought himself under the section.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 30—Contract—Wager—Common intention—Burden of proof—Transaction with broker—Presumption.

Where a person enters into a transaction with a broker, who is entitled to commission and any losses incurred which he has paid, there is a presumption against the transaction being a wagering one. To constitute a contract by way of wager within section 30 of the Contract Act, a common intention between the party contracting and the broker to wager is essential, and the burden lies upon the party contracting to show that the transaction was a wager. ## JUDGMENT.

Fawcett, J. O.—The plaintiffs in the suit, out of which this second appeal arises, sued for the recovery of Rs. 1,000, alleged to be due on the foot of a commission agency account, comprising 15 transactions of purchase and sale of 4,200 bags of wheat. The defendant-respondent, Harchumal, whose liability is in issue, is a resident of Sukkur and, according to the finding of the lower Appellate Court, is a petty shop-keeper doing a little money-lending and selling a little grain in retail at his shop. The plaintiffs also reside at Sukkur and do business there as grain dealers and commission agents on a small scale. It has also been held by the lower Court that, under the defendants' instructions, the plaintiffs purchased these 4,200 bags of wheat for the defendants between August and October and re-sold them by November. These purchases and sales were made through other agents employed by the plaintiffs at Multan. And it appears from the evidence that, what was actually the subject of transactions were the Railway Receipts under which consignments of wheat were made at Multan to dealers in wheat at Karachi. In the case of forward contracts such as those in this case, the firm to which the consignments are made, pay the final holder of the Railway Receipt the amount due under the contract, less 10 per cent., which is withheld for adjustment after the goods have been weighed and tested at Karachi. It appears that these Railway Receipts generally pass from hand to hand, and that the intermediate dealers only pay or recover the differences of prices that occur in their transactions. On these main facts, the Assistant Judge, Sukkur, had held that there was no intention to give and take delivery in any event, and that the transactions in question were wagers and accordingly void under section 30 of the Indian Contract Act. The plaintiffs' suit, which had been decreed by the Trial Court, was therefore, dismissed with costs throughout.

The appellants urge that the Judge of the Court below has erred in law in arriving at this finding. The main principle which governs the case is that as laid down in Bhagwandas Parashram v. Burjorji Ruttonji Bomanji (1): Speculation does not necessarily involve a contract by way of wager, and to constitute such a contract a common intention to wager is essential. In a case like this, where the defendant entered into transactions with a broker who merely sues in respect of his commission and any losses incurred which he has paid, there is a presumption against the transaction being a wagering one. This is clearly pointed out in Sassoon v. Tokersey (2). Sir Lawrence Jenkins in his judgment, at page 624, points out: "that the plaintiffs in that case were merely commission agents, entitled as such to their proper remuneration and to re-imbursement of expenses but they took no risks; the only risk that was suggested was that which might be the sequel of supervening insolvency, but obviously that is not a risk which converts an otherwise legitimate contract into a wager." As remarked in Pollock and Mulla's Contract Act, 3rd Edition, page 188, the presumption in favour of the broker is considerably strengthened where the broker is authorised by the principal to contract with the third person in his (the broker's) own name, for the third person may in such case remain undisclosed even after the contract is made. This applies in the present case, for the evidence shows the plaintiffs made their contracts at Multan in their own names. The learned Judge below says that it has been settled that there may be a wagering contract between a commission agent and his constituent and cites as authority for this the case of Burjorji Ruttonji Bomanji v. Bhagwandas Parashram (3), which is the same case as that already referred. That case affords very little support to the proposition of the learned Judge because it was one of a Pakia Adatia, who [as is pointed out in the judgment in the same case by the Bombay High Court, Burjorji Ruttonji Bomanji v. Bhagwandas Parashram (3)], is on the same footing as an ordinary principle, and is not, therefore, in the position of a disinterested broker. No doubt, the presumption to which I have referred may be rebutted by evidence of a common intention to wager though the contract has been brought about by a broker. The case of Eshwar Doss v. Venkatasubba Rau (4) supplies an instance of such a case. But the burden, of course, lies upon the defendant to show that the broker had the common intention which is necessary to bring the case under section 30 of the Indian Contract Act or Bombay Act III of 1865. In the present case, even though the plaintiffs may have known that the defendants entered into the contracts as wagering transactions with the intention of paying the differences only, and that he would be unable to complete the contracts by payment and delivery having regard to his position and means, still that is no answer to a suit by the broker (see Pollock and Mulla's Contract Act, 3rd Edition, page 193). This had been laid down in many cases such as Perosha Oursetji Parakh v. Manekji Dossabhoj Watcha (5) and Sassoon v. Tokersey (2). And the underlying principle has been approved by the Privy Council in the case of Bhagwandas Parashram v. Burjorji Ruttonji Bomanji (1). Nor is it shown that the contracts which the plaintiffs entered into with the third person on behalf of the defendants were wagering contracts as between the plaintiffs and those third persons. There is no finding to that effect, nor does the evidence on the record support any such conclusion. No doubt, it is true that no delivery of the actual grain can be made by one intermediate dealer to another, who has purchased the Railway Receipt from the former. The grain has to be delivered to the firm to which it is consigned. But that does not suffice to make the transaction a wagering one. Any purchaser who obtains the Railway Receipt can, as I understand the case, go to Karachi and, on the strength of his possession of the receipt and assignment in his favour, claim to deliver the grain to the consignee and recover 90 per cent. of the amount due under the contract to the consignor and the further amount that is settled after delivery. That is a transaction which is void of any wagering element, and there is no room, therefore, for the contention that such transactions cannot be treated as bona fide business. The burden of showing that any of the transactions is void as being a contract by way of wager rests upon the defendant who sets up that plea. In this case, that burden has not, in my opinion, been discharged, and the case is the ordinary one of a commission agent, who has a presumption in his favour. This presumption having not been rebutted, I do not think, that the lower Court was justified in its finding. That finding is based on a misconception of the real law applicable to the case.

I would, therefore, reverse the lower Court's decree and restore that of the Court of first instance. I would also, in suppression of the lower Court's order as to costs, order the defendant-respondent, Harchumal, to pay the plaintiffs' costs throughout.

KENNEDY, A. J. C.—I agree.

Appeal from an order of Mr. Justice Chaudhuri.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal from an order made by Mr. Justice Chaudhuri on an application under section 38 of the Indian Companies Act for the removal of the name of the respondent from the Register of Members of a Company known as the Bengal Co., Ltd.

On the 19th June 1915 the respondent agreed to purchase six ordinary shares of the Company on the understanding that he would be elected as one of its Special Directors. On the same date he paid Rs. 1,500 for the six shares, which were issued to him two days later. On the 27th June 1915 the appellant entered into an agreement with the Company for a first charge, to the extent of Rs. 10,000, on all uncalled share capital; he advanced Rs. 5,000, on the same day and the balance was paid on the 11th January, 1916. The mortgage instrument, which was executed by the Company in favour of the appellant on the 21st March 1916, referred specifically to thirty ordinary shares of Rs. 1,000 each, six ordinary shares, class 'A', of Rs. 500 each, and twenty-seven preference shares of Rs. 100. It is not disputed that the six ordinary shares specified in the schedule to the document are those that belonged to the respondent; consequently, there can be no doubt that the appellant had a specific charge on the six shares in question.

It appears that the respondent was not elected as a Special Director. He thereupon instituted a suit in the Court of Small Causes, on the 7th May 1918, for damages for breach of agreement and obtained a decree against the Company on the 7th August 1918. On the 20th December 1918 the respondent made an application under section 38 of the Indian Companies Act, with a view to have his name removed from the Register of Members of the Company. The Company did not oppose the application, which was, however, contested by the present appellant. Mr. Justice Chaudhuri expressed a doubt, whether the appellant, a mortgagee of the Company, had locus standi in these proceedings, but held that, even if he was allowed to intervene, it would be inexpedient to decide summarily the objection raised by him. In this view, Mr. Justice Chaudhuri, on the 4th March 1919, made an order in favour of the respondent, without opportunity afforded to the appellant to place his objections before the Court for adjudication. The mortgagee accordingly lodged this appeal on the 11th April 1919. Thereafter, on the 16th June 1919, the respondent made an application for liquidation of the Company and three days later obtained an order in that behalf. The appellant has now argued, first, that section 38 is comprehensive enough to entitle a person in his position to oppose the application of the respondent for removal of his name from the Register of Members of the Company; and, secondly, that on the indisputable facts of the case, the application should have been refused on the merits. In our opinion, these contentions are well founded.

It is now well settled that, although persons are not entitled to an order ex debito iustitie, the jurisdiction under section 38 is unlimited, with a discretion in the Court in the circumstances of each case. In support of this proposition, reference may be made to the decisions in Kimberley North Block Diamond

Company, In re, Wernher, Ex parte (1), Ruby Consolidated Mining Company, In re, Askew's case (2), Sussex Brick Co. Ltd., In re (3) and Gresham Life Assurance Society, In re, Penney, Ex parte (4). In a simple case where an immediate rectification is essential, it may be desirable to apply under the section; but if the case is at all complicated, an action should be brought. The respondent has, however, argued that section 38 does not authorise the Court to consider a dispute between a member and a stranger. In support of this proposition, reliance has been placed upon the language of sub-section (1) of section 38, which is in these terms: "On any application under this section, the Court may decide any question relating to the title of any person who is a party to the application to have his name entered in or omitted from the Register, whether the question arises between members or alleged members, or between members or alleged members on the one hand and the Company on the other hand: and, generally, may decide any question necessary or expedient to be decided for rectification of the register." Mr. Ghose has contended that the generality of the concluding words of the sub-section is materially restricted by what precedes, and that, notwithstanding their comprehensive phraseology, we are bound to hold that "a question necessary or expedient to be decided for rectification of the Register" must be a question between members or alleged members, or between members on the one hand and the Company on the other hand. We are of opinion that we should not adopt this narrow interpretation of the section. The Legislature obviously intended that the Court should have the widest possible power to determine, in its discretion, questions which may appear to it to be necessary or expedient for decision before an order for rectification is made or refused. In the case before us, the appellant was manifestly entitled to intervene to oppose the application made by the respondent. He is vitally interested in these proceedings and his position might be seriously prejudiced by an order for rectification made behind his back. There is no conceivable reason why the respondent should be allowed to obtain an ex parte order, and the appellant should be driven to fight him in a suit brought for the purpose.

We may point out that the respondent has hitherto proceeded on the assumption that there was a valid contract between him and the Company. There was admittedly an agreement between him and the Company for the transfer of six shares. He obtained the shares, and, on the basis of his position as a share-holder, got his name entered in the Register of the Company. Subsequently, he sued the Company successfully in the Court of Small Causes for damages for breach of contract. That suit could be maintained only on the assumption that there was a valid contract between him and the Company, which had been unlawfully broken by them. In these circumstances, there can be no room for controversy that he was a share holder and that the appellant had a valid charge on the uncalled capital covered by those shares. The appellant must consequently be heard, on the elementary principle that no man should be prejudiced unheard. The view we take follows as a corollary from the principle that the Register of Members is the creditors' guarantee, showing them to whom and to what they have to trust, and must consequently be properly kept, so that the names appearing therein are all the names and nothing but the names of the persons really for the time being liable to the creditors.

The result is, that this appeal is allowed and the application made by the respondent dismissed with costs in both Courts.

FLETCHER, J.—I agree.

The propriety of an ex parte order setting aside an order dismissing an appeal for default, may be questioned at the hearing of the appeal, and is open to re-consideration at the instance of the party aggrieved. [p. 949, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where an appeal is dismissed owing to the default of the appellant in depositing the sum required to defray the cost of serving notices, the order of dismissal should not be set aside except for just and reasonable cause sufficient to meet the provisions of Order IX, rule 9 or Order XLI, rule 19 of the Civil Procedure Code. ## JUDGMENT.

FAWCETT, J. C.—The present appeal was filed on the 21st of January 1918 and was admitted on or about the 21st of February. The record of the lower Court was then called for and on the 5th of March, the draft notice to the respondents was sent to the Nazir for recovery of the expenses due in respect of the appeal. At that time, rule 2 of Chapter XV of the Court Rules required that no notice of hearing of the appeal should issue to the opposite party unless a sum sufficient to cover the estimated cost of preparing the copies and translations required for the paper-book had been deposited in Court. The requisite applications for copies and translations were appended to the appeal, and the estimated cost of preparing these copies and translations had been fixed at Rs. 100 and 200 respectively on the 5th of March. The costs of the notices came to another Rs. 30. On the 13th of March the draft notice and the applications for copies and translations were returned by the Nazir with an endorsement "costs not paid in time." Thereafter no further steps appear to have been taken until the 16th of July, when Mr. Shahani, who had presented the appeal on behalf of the appellants, sent a letter stating that, owing to certain reasons, he had returned his brief and that he did not any more represent the appellants in the matter. The case then appears to have been set down and was brought up in Court on the 2nd of August, when it was dismissed under Order XLI, rule 18, Civil Procedure Code. In the order so dismissing it, it was noted that no appearance was put in for the appellants. On the 20th of August the appellants Nos. 2—4 presented an application, under Order XLI, rule 19, praying the Court to readmit the appeal on the grounds stated in the application. Affidavits were appended to this application in support of it. On the 27th of September the Pleader for the applicants was heard and the Court passed an order readmitting the appeal without prejudice to any objection the respondents might raise at the hearing. Mr. Rupchand for the respondents has accordingly taken a preliminary objection at the hearing of the appeal that the applicants have not proved that they were prevented by any sufficient cause from depositing the sum required to defray the cost of serving the notices on the respondents, and that, therefore, the ex parte order readmitting the appeal under Order XLI, rule 19, should be set aside.

Mr. Dipchand for the appellants has raised certain points, which I will deal with before discussing the case on the merits.

In the first place, he contended that Order XLV, rule 19, only requires the Court to be satisfied on the point mentioned in it and that the Court in readmitting the appeal must have been so satisfied; consequently, it is not now open to the Court to cancel that order. This contention, in my opinion, is clearly unsustainable. The case is on all fours with the admission of an appeal after the period of limitation has expired without notice to the respondents. The Privy Council in Krishnasami Panikondar v. Ramasami Chettiar (1) has held that, where such an order has been made, it would amount to a denial of justice to preclude the respondents from questioning its propriety, and that such an order should be treated as open to re-consideration at the instance of the respondents. This case is, in fact, a stronger one, because the Court in its order expressly made it subject to the consideration of any objection at the hearing.

Mr. Dipchand has next contended that the Court's order dismissing the appeal for default under Order XLI, rule 18, was illegal and should be set aside, or at any rate reviewed. No such contention is contained in the application under consideration, and the order in question cannot be reviewed by another Bench of this Court, except in accordance with the provisions of Order XLVII of the Civil Procedure Code. This follows from the general rule that, no Court has the power of setting aside an order that is properly made unless it is given by Statute. Order XLI, rule 19 provides one method in which an order dismissing an appeal for default can be set aside, but that does not cover the case of its being set aside for illegality. The only provisions under which this Court can set it aside on that ground are those contained in section 114 and Order XLVII, viz., by review, cf. Fatimunnissa v. Denki Pershad (2). These provisions require, in the first place, an application by a person considering himself aggrieved by the decree or order complained of and no such application has been made. Also under Order XLVII, rule 4, a review cannot be granted without previous notice of the application for review to the opposite party. No such notice has been given. Thirdly, under Order XLVII, rule 5, the application for review can be heard only by my learned brother, who was one of the two Judges who passed the order in question, the other Judge being no longer attached to this Court. Therefore, in my opinion, it is not open to us, on the present application, to consider the objection of illegality.

A third point taken is that, as the appellant No. 1, Musammal Janat, had died on the 31st of March 1918, her heirs had six months within which to be joined as her legal representatives, so that no order could be passed to their prejudice on the 2nd of August 1918. This point appears from the record to have been urged by appellant's Pleader at the time the order re admitting the appeal was passed. But is not one of the grounds on which the Court has been asked to interfere under Order XLI, rule 19, and in regard to that rule it is on the same footing as the ground of illegality just considered. In any case, it seems to me that section 146, Civil Procedure Code, suffices to meet any objection of this kind, as has been held in the case of Venkatasubbier v. S. Krishnamurthi (3). The applicants themselves support this view by heading their application as one made under section 146 and stating that appellants Nos. 2 and 3 applied not only in their own right but also as representatives of deceased appellant No. 1. It is, therefore, unnecessary, in my opinion, to consider the questions which have been argued in regard to Order XXII, rules 2 and 3 and Order XLI, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code.

Coming to the merits I can see no adequate ground for holding it proved that the applicants were prevented by a sufficient cause from depositing the sum required to defray the costs of serving the notices. Those costs, strictly speaking, were limited to the sum of Rs. 30, but rule 2 of Chapter XV of the Court Rules, which has already been mentioned, required the simultaneous deposit of Rs. 300. Even leaving out of account this latter sum, the affidavits attached to the application show that the Rs. 30 required for notices were not paid to the appellant's Counsel, Mr. Shabani, until the 26th of June 1918. And no tender of any amount was made to the Court until some time in July. The grounds put forward for the delay are, that the appellants are parda nashin ladies, who had to entrust their affairs to an Attorney who lived in a village, which is out of the way of quick postal communication; that the Attorney was ill and so could not personally attend to the matter; that a friend of his at Hyderabad was also ill; that there was a difficulty in raising the sum required, and that the Pleaders engaged in the matter neglected to take proper steps to pay in the amounts required after they had received them. The allegation that the Attorney was so ill that he could not make personal arrangements to pay the sum required, rests merely on his own statement, and such a statement cannot safely be accepted without corroboration. If he was so ill that he could not personally attend to the matter, arrangements should have been made for some creeper to do the needful. The appellants have no doubt been unfortunate in the conduct of their agents. But it would be setting up a bad precedent to relieve them on the ground of misconduct or neglect of duty on the part of their agents; cf. Raji Lal v. Nawal Singh (4). Nor do I think that the fact that the applicants are parda nashin ladies should be allowed to make any difference, as has already been held by this Court in Usto Sohebdino v. Ghulam Kadir (5). The contrary view would defeat the clear intention of the Legislature that a party should exercise due diligence in prosecuting a suit or appeal. I have considered whether the case might possibly be held to fall under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, or otherwise justify a departure from the strict terms of Order XLI, rule 19. On this point I see no reason to alter the opinion I expressed in the case of Usto Sohebdino v. Ghulam Kadir (5), that the Court cannot restore a suit or appeal for a just and reasonable cause which has not been sufficient to meet the provisions of Order IX, rule 9, or Order XLI, rule 19, Civil Procedure Code, and the contrary view once taken in the Madras High Court has now been overruled in Gadi Neelaveni v.

KEDARNATH BABULAL V. SUMPATRAM DOOGUR.

Marappareldi Gari Narayana Reldi (6). There it is held that section 151, Civil Procedure Code, cannot be applied to a case like this, and even if it could, I do not think it can be said that it is necessary for the ends of justice to allow the appeal to be re-admitted. In Lalbur v. Choithran Kalandas (7) the maxim actus curiæ neminem gravabit—the act of the Court should not prejudice any one—was applied to rectify a mistake which had been inadvertently made by the Court. But here I can find no such mistake. Under Chapter XV, rule 2 of the Court Rules, the office rightly required a deposit of the whole amount due, and even if this were wrong the delay from March to July is not properly accounted for. I would, therefore, set aside the provisional order re-admitting the appeal and order the appellants to bear the respondents' costs of the appeal.

I would add that, in my opinion, the objection to passing a provisional order under section 5 of the Limitation Act, which is pointed out in Krishnasami Panikondar's case (1), applies equally to a provisional order of the kind now in question and I think it is desirable that rule 1 (1), Chapter XV, should be amended so as to cover such an order.

KEMP, A. J. C.—I agree.

Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), s. 19—Stay of proceedings, order for—Jurisdiction—Discretion—Appeal, interference in.

Before the jurisdiction of the Court to make an order for stay of proceedings under section 19 of the Arbitration Act, can be invoked, it must be established beyond doubt that there is a valid submission: and before an order staying proceedings can be made the Court must be satisfied that there is no sufficient reason why the matter should not be referred in accordance with the submission, and that the applicant was, at the time when the proceedings were commenced and still remains, ready and willing to do all things necessary to the proper conduct of the arbitration [p. 952, col. 2.]

The making of an order staying proceedings is a matter largely in the discretion of the Court, and when the discretion has been exercised, a strong case must be made out to justify the interference of a Court of Appeal [p. 952, col. 2; p. 953, col. 1.]

Appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Greaves.

Mr. B. L. Mitter, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. N. Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—We are invited in this appeal to consider the propriety of an order made by Mr. Justice Greaves whereby he has refused an application for stay of a suit under section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899.

On the 8th August 1918, the appellants agreed to purchase from the respondents 50 bales of Japanese grey shirting and sheeting. The material portion of the contract provided as follows: "All conditions according to bahar (that is, importing firm), interest, cool charges, according to the custom of Bazar, the goods being of Japan Cotton Company's Office." It has been argued that this implies the incorporation of an arbitration clause contained in the form of contract used by the Japan Cotton Trading Company. That arbitration clause is in these terms:—"Any dispute as to damage, difference, inferiority, short quantity or measure or defect or amount of allowance to be referred, at seller's option, to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce or two European or Japanese merchants or European or Japanese Assistants in mercantile firms, one to be named by each party; if either party shall fail to nominate an arbitrator within three days after being required to do so, the other party shall be at liberty to appoint both arbitrators or to refer to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce at his discretion."

It is alleged by the appellants that the goods delivered were not in accordance with the contract and were in fact different and defective goods. They accordingly refused to accept delivery, and, on the 13th January 1919, cancelled the contract. The respondents thereupon proceeded "to re-sell the goods," although exception was taken to that course by the appellants on the 2nd May 1919. On the 19th May 1919 the appellants referred the matter to the arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce on the assumption that the arbitration clause contained in the contract form used by the Japanese Cotton Trading Company had become incorporated in the contract between the parties. On the 28th May 1919 the respondents sellers objected to the arbitration as without jurisdiction, and on the 18th July 1919 they instituted a suit on the Original Side of this Court for the enforcement of their claim. On the 30th July 1919 summonses in the suit were served upon the buyers (now appellants), with the result that, on the 7th August 1919 they made an application under section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act for stay of the suit. This application recited the correspondence between the parties and concluded with the following prayer:—"That all proceedings in the aforesaid Suit No. 1858 of 1919 may be stayed until the said Tribunal of Arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce makes and publishes the award after proceeding with and completing the said arbitration now pending and that the costs of and incidental to this application may be reserved." This application was heard by Mr. Justice Greaves. He apparently held that, in view of the construction placed by him upon the contract form used by the Japanese Cotton Trading Company in the case of Ochandmull Ganeshmull v. Nippon Mankaru Kabusheki Kaisha (Appeal from Order No. 42 of 1919), the application could not be entertained.

On the present appeal, the buyers have argued that the construction placed upon the contract cannot be supported. On behalf of the sellers no attempt has been made to support the order on the ground assigned by the learned Judge, and, in our opinion, it cannot be supported, because the facts disclosed in the correspondence make it abundantly clear that the events had not taken such a turn that the arbitration clause (assumed to have been incorporated in the contract between the parties), could be utilised by one of them and a reference made thereunder. But the respondents have contended that the order of the learned Judge may be supported on other grounds, which we now proceed to examine.

Section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act provides as follows:

"Where any party to a submission to which this Act applies, or any person claiming under him, commences any legal proceedings against any other party to the submission, or any person claiming under him in respect of any matter agreed to be referred, any party to such legal proceedings may, at any time after appearance and before filing a written statement or taking any other steps in the proceedings, apply to the Court to stay the proceedings; and the Court, if satisfied that there is no sufficient reason why the matter should not be referred in accordance with the submission and that the applicant was, at the time when the proceedings were commenced, and still remains, ready and willing to do all things necessary to the proper conduct of the arbitration, may make an order staying the proceedings."

The term "submission" is defined in clause (b) of section 4 to mean a written agreement to submit present or future differences to arbitration, whether the arbitrator is named therein or not. It is plain that, before the jurisdiction of the Court to make an order for stay under section 19 can be invoked, it must be established beyond doubt that there is a valid submission. This is by no means clear in the case before us, for, it is at least doubtful whether the arbitration clause in the Japanese contract form was or was not incorporated, by reference, as a condition in the contract between the parties. But, let us assume that there was a submission: before an order can be made, the Court must be satisfied that there is no sufficient reason why the matter should not be referred in accordance with the submission and that the applicant was, at the time when the proceedings were commenced and still remains, ready and willing to do all things necessary to the proper conduct of the arbitration. This is manifestly a matter largely in the discretion of the Court, which, no doubt, must be judicially exercised. But when the discretion has been exercised by the primary Court, a

THE MIDNAPORE ZEMINDARI

Palayams in Southern Districts of Madras, whether alienable—Military service tenures, abolition of, by Proclamation—Police service tenures—Madras Regulation XXV of 1802.

Where lands in British India are held on military service tenure, there is good reason for holding that no one of the successive tenants could deal with the land so as to deprive the next holder of the source from which his duties might be discharged. [p. 956, cols. 1 & 2.]

In the Southern Districts of Madras, sundry palayams were originally held on military service tenure and subject to the payment of a tribute to the paramount power. But these military service tenures were abolished and determined by a Proclamation of the Governor in Council, dated 1st December 1801, and thereafter any character of inalienability attaching to the palayams by virtue of such tenure ceased. [p. 956, cols. 1 & 2.]

Police service tenures were abolished in 1816 by the Government of Madras: but it was held in the present case that it was not proved that the Palayam had in fact been held on such a tenure. [p. 965, col. 2; p. 956, col. 1.]

Madras Regulation XXV of 1802 neither gives to, nor takes away from, the former owners of lands not permanently settled any rights which they then had. [p. 958, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Madras High Court, (Sir John Wallis, Kt., Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Spencer), dated 18th February 1918, reported as 47 Ind. Cas. 733, reversing a decree of the District Judge, Madura.

FACTS are very fully stated in their Lordships' judgment. The Madura District Judge decreed the suit, holding that the Palayam was inalienable but his decree was reversed and the suit dismissed by the Madras High Court (Wallis, C. J., and Spencer, J.). Hence this appeal.

Mr. Dunne, K. O., (with him Mr. Narasimham), for the Appellant, submitted that the High Court were wrong in treating this Palayam as an ordinary Zemindari. It was an unsettled Palayam. The case of Collector of Trichinopoly v. Leekamani (1) was not one of general application: it merely showed that that strong case must be made out to justify the interference of a Court of Appeal. In this connection, reference may usefully be made to the observations of Buckley, L. J., in Freeman & Sons v. Chester Rural District Council (1): "Section 4 of the Arbitration Act, 1889," (which corresponds to section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act), "gives a discretion, and that in two ways, namely, (i) the words are permissive, not imperative, for the verb is 'may make', not 'shall make', and (ii) the jurisdiction to stay the proceedings arises if the Court is 'satisfied that there is no sufficient reason why the matter should not be referred in accordance with the submission.'" The fact that one member of a Court is of opinion that the matter should not be referred to arbitration is sufficient to enable another member to concur, though the latter is satisfied that there is no sufficient reason why the matter should not be referred and if it had rested with himself alone, would have directed a stay. [See also Vawdrey v. Simpton (2), Barnes v. Youngs (3)]. In the case before us, there is not only a substantial dispute as to whether the contract between the parties includes an arbitration clause, there are abundant indications that the appellants initiated the arbitration proceedings in contravention of the term of the alleged arbitration clause. The first choice rested with the respondents sellers, who were not afforded an opportunity to exercise the option. This clearly does not show a readiness and willingness on the part of the appellants to do all things necessary to the proper conduct of the arbitration.

In this view the order of Mr. Justice Greaves must be confirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

particular estate was in the nature of an ordinary Zemindari and followed the ordinary law, not that all unsettled Palayams were. Here the Palayam was not joint family property. The family merely had a limited right to an estate as the appanage of an office. The position resembled that of the Ghatwali tenures in Bengal. To the end Government took the view that the holder of the estate for the time being was a mere farmer for his life. The early Sanads contained no power to transfer. In early days Government had absolute power as to the succession, and we submit that is still the case. The holder only had a life-interest, and it was for Government to recognise any new incumbent. The hereditage applied, if at all, to the office and not to the estate. The land was service land attached to the office, and as such inalienable: Mayne, Hindu Law, sections 337, 338.

[LORD DUNEDIN.—According to you there is no succession.]

There was no succession to the estate. Each new incumbent came in by virtue of succeeding to the office and was entitled to repudiate anything which his predecessor had done.

[LORD DUNEDIN.—You are almost asking us to establish a new tenure.]

I admit I cannot give decisions or dicta as to Palayams, but there are other estates in India, e. g., the Ghatwali tenures of this kind: and the absence of judicial recognition in Madras may be due to the fact that before Sartui Kuari v. Deora Kuari (2) it was not necessary, in the view of the law taken there, to raise points of this kind.

[LORD DUNEDIN.—For the same reason it matters little what Government said before 1888].

For a long series of years this was treated by every one as a military tenure. Both the family and the Government took that view. Prior to Regulation XXV of 1802 the holders family had no title to the succession. If advantage had been taken of that Regulation they would have acquired a title, but this was not done. The original tenure did not involve a proprietary right in the estate and it is not shown to have ever been changed.

Mr. De Gruyther, K. O. and Mr. Kenworthy Brown, for the Respondents, were not called on.

JUDGMENT.

SIR JOHN ECCLES.—This is an appeal from a (2) 15 I. A. 51; 10 A. 272 (P. C.); 5 Sar. P. O. J. 189; 12 Ind. Jur. 213; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 182.

decree, dated the 18th February 1918, of the High Court at Madras, which reversed a decree, dated the 11th September 1916, of the District Judge of Madura.

The suit in which this appeal has arisen was brought to obtain, so far as is now material, against the Midnapore Zemindari Company, Limited, hereinafter referred to as the respondent Company, a decree for possession of the properties specified in Schedules A and C of the plaint, and for mesne profits. The properties claimed were villages of the Palayam of Kannivadi. The suit was brought by two brothers, sons by different wives of the late Malayandi Appaya Naicker, a Hindu, one of whom only could have obtained a decree if their case had been proved. The first plaintiff on the record was Malayandi Appayasami Naicker, who was the son of Malayandi Appaya Naicker by his first or senior wife; he is the appellant here, and will be hereafter referred to as the appellant. The second plaintiff on the record was the son of Malayandi Appaya Naicker by his second or junior wife, and is by date of birth the elder of the two brothers. They were obviously joined as plaintiffs, owing to some doubt as to which of them was entitled, on the death of their father in 1911, to succeed to the Palayam by the custom of primogeniture applicable in the family. The second plaintiff did not appear and was not represented in the High Court, and he is not a party to this appeal, so need not again be referred to.

In the plaint it was alleged that the Palayam of Kannivadi is an ancient impartible Palayam, descendible to a single heir according to the custom of primogeniture; that the Palayam was conferred as a military fief by a Nayak Ruler of Madura about A. D. 1500 upon an ancestor of the appellant who was placed in charge of one of the principal bastions of Madura Fort; that the Palayagar was by virtue of the tenure liable to be called upon to render military service by furnishing men and other aid, and for Police duties and to pay annual tribute to the State; that the Palayam continued to be held by the appellant's family under the same conditions of tenure and service after the assumption of the Dindigul country by the British; and "That the said Kannivadi Palayam is inalienable beyond the life of the Palayagar for the time being, both by reason of the tenure and according to the custom of the family, which custom came into existence in consequence of the character of the tenure."

Briefly stated, the connection of the respondent Company with the Palayam of Kannivadi, according to the allegations in plaint, is as follows:—The grand father and father of the appellant in 1895 mortgaged the Palayam to the Commercial Bank, Limited, of Madras, in respect of debts of theirs which were not binding upon the appellant or upon the Palayam; on that mortgage the Bank obtained a decree, and in execution of that decree, brought the Palayam to sale at auction, and at the sale purchased the estate in 1900, and on the 8th January 1901 conveyed all their rights under the decree and under the auction sales to the respondent Company, who have since then been in possession.

Various other matters were alleged in the plaint as to which no arguments were addressed to their Lordships by either side.

The respondent Company in their written statement admitted that the Zemindari of Kannivadi was, at the time of the sale to the Bank, impartible and was descendible to a single heir according to the custom of primogeniture, but they denied that it had been conferred upon an ancestor of the appellant "for being in charge of a bastion of the Madras Fort;" denied that the estate had been granted or was ever held subject to any obligation of rendering military or Police service, or was inalienable, or that the Zamindar had ever held any office by virtue of which he was under any obligation to perform military or Police duties; denied that there is any family custom or anything in the tenure of the Kannivadi Zemindari which rendered it inalienable beyond the life of the Palayagar, and alleged that in law the Zamindar for the time being of the Kannivadi Zemindari always possessed an absolute interest in it with full powers of alienation. The respondent Company in their written statement pleaded several other matters, which, in the view that their Lordships take of the case, are not now necessary to be considered.

There were 27 issues fixed for the trial of the suit, but in their Lordships' opinion, the tenth issue was, in the circumstances, that upon which the decision of this appeal depends. It was:—

"X. Whether the plaint mentioned Zemindari is inalienable either by custom or by virtue of its tenure?" If it was not inalienable either by custom or by reason of its tenure, the Palayagar for the time was entitled to mortgage or to transfer absolutely every village in the Palayam according to his pleasure. That is the result of the decisions of the Board in cases of impartible estates in India which descend according to a custom of primogeniture. Until the law on this subject was placed by decisions of the Board beyond a doubt, there was a current of judicial decisions in the Presidency of Madras to the effect that a holder of an impartible estate which descended by a rule of primogeniture could not transfer except for his own lifetime any part of the estate unless, possibly, for necessity.

The suit was tried by the District Judge of Madras. The District Judge states in his judgment that:—

"The plaintiffs base their case not on custom but on the military and Police nature of the tenure and rely on the decision in I. L. R. 10, Allahabad 285, [Sri Rao Kuari v. Deora, Kuari (2)] to establish that if such is its tenure it (the estate) is inalienable..... A distinction is also sought to be drawn between the present case and others in that, in them, there was a Permanent Settlement whereas in the present case the estate was an unsettled Palayam till the Bank obtained a Permanent Sanad in 1905 from the Government."

The District Judge, after an elaborate consideration of all the historical references to the family to which the appellant here belonged, and of reports and proceedings of Officers of the Government, came to the conclusion that the Palayam of Kannivadi was held, down to 1816, for Police as well as military service and that, although by 1816 the Government had removed from the Palayagar the duty of Police services, the Government had not by the grant of a Zemindari Sanad altered the tenure by which the Palayam was held. His final conclusion on the tenth issue is thus expressed:—"It seems to me, therefore, that as I have held the Palayam to have been held on a military and Karal (Police) tenure that, as it had never been settled and as there was no express putting an end to the military liabilities, the estate must be held to have been held on the old tenure up to the grant of the Sanad in 1905 to the Bank, and that, therefore, up to that date, the estate was inalienable. This is my finding on Issue No. 10." The District Judge made a decree in favour of the appellant here, against the respondent Company. From that decree the respondent Company appealed to the High Court at Madras.

The High Court in dealing with the appeal considered separately the question as to whether the Palayam of Kannivadi was held on military service tenure, and the question as to whether it was held on a tenure of performing, for the State, Police duties. Their Lordships will adopt the same course in dealing with this appeal. The learned Judges in their judgment referred to the fact that the Board in Naragunty Lutchmeedavamah v. Vengama Naidoo (3), which related to the Naragunty Palayam in the District of Chittore in the Presidency of Madras, had accepted as correct the explanation in Wilson's Glossary that Palayagars were originally petty Chieftains occupying usually tracts of hills or forest country subject to pay tribute and service to the paramount State, but seldom paying either, and more or less independent; but as having at present, since the subjugation of the country by the East India Company, subsided into peaceable land-holders. With reference to that description the learned Judges found that: "There can be no doubt that Kannivadi was a Palayam of this nature." It has not been suggested at the hearing of this appeal that that conclusion of the High Court was not correct. The High Court do not state when the Palayam of Kannivadi was first granted to an ancestor of the appellant; there was not on the record any reliable evidence on that point, but they obviously and rightly considered that the grant had been made before Dindigul, in which District Kannivadi is situated, was ceded to the East India Company by the Treaty of Seringapatam, 1792.

"It may be accepted as a fact that the Palayam of Kannivadi was originally held on military service tenure and subject to the payment of a tribute to the paramount power. Where lands in British India are held on military service tenure, there is good reason for holding that "no one of the successive tenants could deal with the land so as to deprive the next holder of the source from which his duties might be discharged." (See Mayne's Hindu Law, paragraph 337): "A Palayam is in the nature of a Raj, it may belong to an undivided family, but it is not the subject of partition; it can be held by only one member of the family at a time." [See the Naragunty's case (3) cited above.] The question, so far as it depends on military service tenure is concerned, is—Did the Palayam continue to be held on military service tenure when the mortgage to the Bank was made in 1895? The High Court held that the military service of Palayagars of the Madura and Tinnevely Districts was abolished in 1801, by the Proclamation of the 1st December 1801, of Lord Olive, Governor in Council.

On the 2nd October 1799, in consequence of a rebellion which had been fomented and supported by Palayagars of the Tinnevely District, Major Bannerman, as Military Commandant of the Southern Detachment, had been obliged to issue a Proclamation to the Palayagars, land-holders and inhabitants of the Tinnevely District, ordering the Palayagars to destroy all forts in their Palayams and to deliver all guns, gingal pieces, firelocks, matchlocks and pikes in their possession, or in the possession of any of the inhabitants, to the Military Detachments sent to receive them. The Court of Directors, in their letter of 11th February 1801 to Fort St. George (the Government of Madras), sanctioned the gradual introduction of a permanent land settlement in the Presidency, but laid down that it was of first importance that "all subordinate military establishments should be annihilated within the limits subject to the Dominions of the Company." That must have meant that military service tenures should be abolished in the Districts subordinate to Fort St. George.

In consequence of those orders of the 11th February 1801, Lord Olive, Governor in Council, issued the Proclamation of the 1st December 1801 which was addressed to the Palayagars of the Madura and Tinnevely Districts. That Proclamation referred to a Proclamation of 9th December 1799 of the Governor in Council of Fort St. George addressed to the Palayagars of Tinnevely and to a rebellion excited and maintained in arms by Palayagars of Panobalam Kurishi and of Virupakshi and by the Sherogars of Sivaganga. The following paragraphs of the Proclamation of the 1st December 1801 show clearly what the Government of Fort St. George intended :—

"Wherefore the Right Honourable Edward, Lord Olive, Governor in Council, aforesaid, with the view of preventing the recurrence of the fatal evils which have attended the possession of arms by the Palayagars and Sherogars of the southern provinces and with the view also of enforcing the conditions of the Proclamation published by Major Bannerman on the 2nd October 1799, formally announces to the Palayagars, Sherogars and inhabitants of the southern provinces the positive determination of His Lordship in Council to suppress the use and exercise of all weapons of offence with the exception of such as shall be authorized by the British Government.

"The military service heretofore rendered by the Palayagars and Sherogars having been suppressed and the Company having in consequence charged itself with the protection and defence of the Palayagar countries, the possession of fire arms and weapons of offence is manifestly become unnecessary to the safety of people. The Right Honourable the Governor in Council, therefore, orders and directs all persons possessed of arms in the provinces of Dindigul, Tinnevely, Ramnadpuram, Sivaganga, and Madura to deliver the said arms consisting of muskets, matchlocks, pikes (to ?) Lieutenant-Colonel Agnew, the Officer now commanding the forces in those provinces.

"It is unnecessary to assure the people of the southern province that the Right Honourable the Governor in Council in the determination of carrying this resolution into effect can be governed by no other motives than those connected with the sacred duty of providing for the permanent tranquility of those countries. His Lordship disclaims every wish of subjecting the Chiefs and hereditary landlords to any humiliation, but the discontinuance of the general use of arms according to the prevailing habits of those countries being indispensably necessary to the preservation of peace and to the restoration of prosperity, the Governor in Council hopes that the Chieftains will with cheerfulness sacrifice a custom now become useless to the attainment of those important objects.

"With a view, therefore, of tempering the execution of their general resolution with as great a degree of attention as may be practicable to the hereditary customs and to the personal feelings of the Chieftains, the Right Honourable Lord Olive, Governor in Council aforesaid, hereby authorizes each Palayagar or Zemindar to retain a certain number of peons carrying pikes for the purpose of maintaining the pomp and state heretofore attached to the persons of the said Palayagars. But the said number of authorized pikemen shall be fixed and shall continue to be limited for the better execution of this intention, the said number of pikemen shall be determined by the Governor in Council of Fort St. George upon the representation of the several Palayagars, transmitted through the regular channel of the Company's Collector, after Proclamation of the number so fixed, the names of the said pikemen shall be registered in the public cutcherry of the Collector, and the pikes shall in like manner be publicly stamped by the Collector with a mark bearing the sanction of the British Government.

"In the confident expectation of reclaiming the people of the southern provinces from the habit of predatory warfare and in the hope of inducing them to resume the arts of peace and agriculture, the Right Honourable Edward, Lord Olive, Governor in Council of Fort Saint George aforesaid, announces to the Palayagars and to all the inhabitants of their Palayams that it is the intention of British Government to establish a permanent assessment of revenue on the lands of the Palayams upon the principles of Zemindari tenure, which assessment being once fixed shall be liable to no change in any time to come, that the Palayagars becoming by these means Zemindars of their hereditary estates will be exempted from all military service and that the possession of their ancestors will be secured to them under the operation of limited and defined laws to be printed and published as well for the purpose of restraining its own officers to the regulations and ordinances of the Government as of securing to the people their property, their lives and their religious usages of their respective castes."

MALAYANDI APPAYASAMI NAICKER v. MIDNAPORE ZEMINDARI CO. LTD.

It appears to their Lordships that by that Proclamation military service tenures in the districts to which the Proclamation applied were abolished whether the Palayagars obtained a permanent assessment Sanad or not.

Following upon the Proclamation of the 1st December 1801, some Regulation XXV of 1802, under which a Permanent Settlement so far, if at all, as it has any bearing on this case was made with the Bank, and an Istimrari Sanad was granted to the Bank on the 29th September 1905. The Palayam estate had not been previously settled. The Palayagars generally, including the Palayagar of Kannivadi, refused to accept Istimrari Sanads, and when the Palayagar of Kannivadi for the time being was willing to accept a Sanad the Government refused in 1883 to grant him one. There can be little doubt that that refusal to grant him a Sanad was "out of consideration for the family, as it was generally believed that it was more difficult for a creditor to bring to sale unsettled Palayams than Palayam estates which were held under an Istimrari Settlement Sanad. It appears to their Lordships that Regulation XXV of 1802 does not affect the question as to whether in 1895 the Palayam of Kannivadi was alienable or not. The Board decided in the Marungapuri case [Collector of Trichinopoly v. Lekkamani (1)], that the affirmative words of the 2nd section of Regulation XXV of 1802, "That in consequence of the assessment the proprietary right of the soil shall become vested in Zamindars, &c." did not either give to or take away from the former owners of lands not permanently settled, any rights which they then had. It (a settlement under that Regulation) merely vested in all Zamindars an hereditary right at a fixed revenue upon the conclusion of the Permanent Settlement with them [Collector of Trichinopoly v. Lekkamani (1)]. In that case the Board approved of the opinion expressed by the High Court of Madras: "That the existence of a proprietary estate in Polliams or other lands not permanently assessed, and the tenure by which it has been held, are, in our opinion, matters judicially determinable on legal evidence, just as the right to any other property" (page 312). In the same case the Board held that: "The only difference between a Polliam or Zamindari which is permanently settled and one that is not, is that, in the former, the Government is precluded for ever from raising the revenue; and, in the latter, the Government may or may not have that power" (page 313). In the present case the learned Judges of the High Court held that the tenure of military service under which the Palayam of Kannivadi had been held had been abolished and determined by the Proclamation of the 1st December 1801, and with that decision their Lordships have agreed.

It remains to be considered whether the Palayam of Kannivadi was held under a tenure of the Palayagar rendering Police service to the State. The best and most reliable evidence that the Palayam was held on Police service tenure would be a Sanad showing that it was so held. Only two Sanads which were granted to any Palayagar of Kannivadi have been brought to the attention of this Board. They are Sanads which were granted respectively on the 13th July 1797, for the Fasli year 1207, and the 13th July 1800, for the Fasli year 1210, to Appaya Naicker, the then Palayagar. There is nothing in either of those Sanads from which their Lordships can infer that the Palayam of Kannivadi was held on a tenure of rendering Police duties to the State. The conditions in those Sanads by which the Palayagar was bound to protect the inhabitants by preventing, as far as might be in the power of the Palayagar, robberies, depredations, etc., in their properties, to deliver up persons guilty of murder; and not to give shelter to deserters, and to apprehend and deliver them to the Collector are similar to the duties which all landholders and Zamindars in British India have to perform. Even if it were possible to infer from those Sanads that the Palayam of Kannivadi was then held on a tenure of rendering Police duties to the State, the Police duties of Zamindars in that part of the country were abolished in 1816 by the Government of Madras.

Their Lordships hold that in 1895 the Palayam of Kannivadi was not inalienable, and that the then Palayagar had power to alienate it to suit his own purposes, and they will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Where, under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, a Record of Rights is rectified in respect of existing rent, such rectification does not amount to a settlement of rent, so as to bar a suit under section 113 of the Act. [p. 954, col. 2; p. 960, col. 1]

JUDGMENT.—This appeal, which arises out of a suit for enhancement of rent under clauses (a) and (b) of section 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, illustrates the shortcomings and difficulties of the enactment. The plaintiff is the appellant. The lands in suit belong to his Mahal Beldanga. In the time of his predecessor-in-interest there were disputes between her and the tenants as to the rent and area of the holdings. The Magistrate of the district then intervened and the disputes were settled, the principal tenants executing niriknamas at certain rates. Among them the defendant executed furdas in respect of 68 bighas, 17 kattas and odd in his possession, agreeing to pay rent at Rs. 63 6 9 on the basis of the niriknama. He also executed a kabuliyat in favour of Maharani Swarnamoyi, the predecessor, on the basis of which he paid rent up to 1908. On default made, the plaintiff instituted rent-suits on the strength of the kabuliyat, which was held invalid by this Hon'ble Court as being in contravention of section 29 of the Tenancy Act. During the pendency of the appeals in the High Court, Record of Rights was prepared in respect of that mal which was finally published on the 24th January 1908. In such record the defendant was entered as a settled raiyat and the rent at Rs. 32-10-3 and the area was found to be 69 bighas, 4 kattas and odd. Thereupon, the tenants made an application under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act on the 28th March 1908 anticipating the plaintiff's objections. The plaintiff made an application on the 24th April 1908 under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to rectify the record. His application was rejected. He claimed rectification on the ground that he was entitled to the kabuliyat rent, and if not so, to an enhancement of the original rental to the extent of two-annas in the rupee. The High Court decision in the rent-suits was given on the 1st June 1908 whereupon the tenant withdrew his application under section 105, on the 23rd June 1908. In August of that year the Revenue Officers disallowed the plaintiff's application, whereupon this suit was instituted. It was urged by the defendant before the learned Mansif that sections 37 and 113 of the Bengal Tenancy Act barred the present suit. He held against such contention.

The learned District Judge, on appeal, agreed that section 37 was not a bar, but held that section 113 clearly barred the present suit. Hence this appeal.

It has been contended before us, as it was contended before the first Appellate Court, that the Record of Rights merely dealt with the existing rent of the land and that the Settlement Officer was not competent to settle a fair and equitable rent until an application under section 105 was made to him. Section 106 deals with the rectification of records and that is what was sought by the plaintiff: he did not in that application, as he could not, apply to have a fair and equitable rent settled. He did not make any application under section 105 for settlement of rent. During the proceedings under section 106, the tenants who had applied under section 105 withdrew their applications, as the High Court had decided in their favour. It was urged on behalf of the tenant that the present suit was barred under section 113. He contends that the rent of his holding was "settled" under Chapter X, when the plaintiff's application under section 106 was rejected and the entry in the record was maintained: that it settled the dispute about

CHAPSI UMERSI v. KESHAVJI DAMJI.

Rent and must be considered as a settlement of the rent. The wording of section 113 is capable of that interpretation, but it involves an absurdity. Section 102 lays down what particulars are to be put down in the record. One of such particulars to be put down is "the rent payable at the time the Record of Rights is being prepared." Section 102, clause (e). It cannot be contended that the Settlement Officer can at that time settle what ought to be assessed as fair and equitable rent. The section undoubtedly empowers the Settlement Officer to settle the existing rent cutting down illegal exactions, if any, and disallowing any amount imposed in contravention of the Act. The expression used in clause (e) is "rent payable" which is certainly loose. The Tenancy Act was amended, and section 105A was added by Bengal Act I of 1907. Section 106, which was a substitution for the original as contained in Bengal Act of 1903, was again amended in 1907 by an additional provision—namely, the last clause. Section 105A was added to include decisions on certain questions arising during the course of settlement of rent under Chapter X; but we think, having regard to the scheme of the preparation and publication of the record, it cannot be contended that a rectification of the record of the nature sought by the plaintiff can be considered as settlement of rent precluding a suit. No claim for settlement of rent under section 30, clauses (a) and (b), was made in the application before the Settlement Officer under section 106 and could not have been made. Section 105 is a special provision. It cannot be said that a person who does not make an application under that section is debarred from bringing a suit. It is unnecessary to refer to the cases cited which do not deal directly with the point, but deal with the distinction between sections 105 and 106. We do not think that the learned Judge was right in holding that the present suit was barred. We hold it is maintainable. As the learned Judge has not dealt with the other points in the appeal before him, we think the appeal should be remanded for further hearing. The defendant will pay the plaintiff his costs of this appeal.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION SUIT No. 1110
OF 1920.

September 30, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Justice Setalvad.

CHAPSI UMERSI—PLAINTIFF

versus

KESHAVJI DAMJI—DEFENDANT.

Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act (II of 1918), s. 2—Landlord and tenant, whether includes tenant and sub-tenant—Standard rent, what is.

The only object of including in the definition 'landlord,' a tenant who sub-lets, and in the definition of 'tenant,' a sub-tenant, in the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act, is to extend the benefits of the Act to sub-tenants, and it was not intended that the standard rent should be determined by different standards between the original landlord and the tenant and between the tenant and the sub-tenant. [p 962, col. 2]

'Standard' means a rule or a mode and can only be one. The whole object of the Rent Act is to prevent tenants being made to pay rent which the Legislature considers excessive or unreasonable. In regard to the same premises, rent which the law regards as unreasonable or excessive between the original landlord and tenant ought not to be regarded as reasonable between the tenant and the sub-tenant. Similarly, rent which the law regards as reasonable between the original landlord and tenant ought not to be regarded as unreasonable between the tenant and the sub-tenant. Standard rent must mean the rent at which the premises were originally let. The standard rent is to be fixed in relation to premises and not in relation to persons, and can, therefore, be only one and not varying as between different individuals. [p. 932, col. 2.]

Mr. Campbell, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Kanga, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—This suit relates to a godown situated on the ground floor of a house at Mandvi belonging to one Keshavji Damji. On the 28th of September 1916 an agreement was entered into between Keshavji Damji and the plaintiffs for a lease of this godown for twenty-three months, to commence from 25th December 1916. At this time the building was being re-constructed and the ground floor was expected to be ready in December and so the lease was made to commence from 25th December. The godown, however, became ready in February 1917, and the plaintiffs commenced paying rent from 22nd February 1917. The plaintiffs sub-let the godown to the defendants for Rs. 275 per month as from the 22nd of February 1917 and the defendants entered into possession on that date. The plaintiffs never themselves entered into possession except through their sub-tenant, the defendants. The defendants commenced paying rent to the plaintiffs from the 22nd February 1917. The defendants paid the said rent of Rs. 275 up to 12th March 1918, but thereafter they refused to pay the stipulated rent and contended that Rs. 110 was the standard rent which, under the Rent Act, they were liable to pay. The defendants paid Rs. 1,474 as rent at the rate of Rs. 110 up to the 27th July 1919 which the plaintiffs took under protest. The plaintiffs claim in this suit Rs. 5,401, being the rent at the rate of Rs. 275 per month from 13th March 1917 to 20th March 1920, after giving credit for Rs. 1,474 paid as aforesaid by the defendants, and claim further rent at Rs. 305 per month, contending that that is standard rent of the premises. By their letter of 14th February 1920, the plaintiffs had given notice to the defendants that they would claim, from March 1920, Rs. 305 from the defendants as the standard rent. The only issue in the case is, "What is the standard rent the defendants are liable to pay?"

It appears that Keshavji Damji, the owner of the premises, filed a suit against the present plaintiffs, in the Small Cause Court, to recover rent at the rate of Rs. 305 per month, for four months, from 13th March 1918 to 8th July 1918. The present plaintiffs contended in the said suit that Rs. 305 was not the standard rent, but the Small Cause Court held against the present plaintiffs that Rs. 305 per month was the standard rent and awarded the same. The said decree was confirmed by the Full Court of the said Court. The said Keshavji Damji instituted another suit against the present plaintiffs in the High Court, being Suit No. 2974 of 1919, to recover rent for thirteen months, subsequent to the 8th of July 1918, at the rate of Rs. 305 per month. The present plaintiffs had in that suit to submit to a decree for rent at that rate. In the present suit the defendants in their written statement alleged that the proceedings in the Small Cause Court and the High Court were collusive and that, in any event, they were not bound by the results of those suits. These charges of collusion were, in the course of the trial, abandoned.

One Narandas Mathuradas was, in January 1916, in occupation of the space comprised within the godown in suit as a tenant, and he was then paying Rs. 100 as rent as shown by the rent bill, dated 17th January 1916, produced by him (Exhibit 4), but it is contended that the godown in suit is not the premises that were in the occupation of the said Narandas on the 1st of January 1916, but, to all intents and purposes, it is new premises, and, therefore, the statutory standard rent must be taken to be the rent at which it was first let. The godown in suit is on the south, and there is another godown on the north which is now occupied by the said Narandas. It appears that Keshavji purchased the building on the ground floor of which the godown in suit is situated, in July 1915, in partnership with one Bhimji. Bhimji's interest was bought by Keshavji who, thereupon, became full owner in September 1915. When Keshavji bought the building, it was in a very dilapidated condition, and there were no tenants on the four upper floors and, except the godowns on the ground floor, the building was unoccupied. Keshavji paid for this building Rs. 73,000. He was advised by his architect, Karani, to reconstruct the building, and he appears to have expended on such reconstruction Rs. 95,000. The rateable value of the old building, when Keshavji bought it, was Rs. 3,785, and the rateable value, now assessed by the Municipality, of the reconstructed building, is Rs. 18,381. The original building stood on 544 square yards of land, and in the reconstructed building further 36 square yards of adjoining land which was vacant and which belonged to Keshavji, were added. Three different applications were submitted to the Municipality at different times for reconstructing different portions of the building. These applications were submitted, under section 342 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, apparently in order to avoid the set-back and other requisitions which would have been made by the Municipality if the application had been in form for the construction of a new building under section 337 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act. The work was begun in March or April 1916, the work on the ground floor was finished in February 1917, and the work on the whole of the building was finished in the beginning of 1918. The evidence of Karani, the architect, which I accept, makes it clear that the net result of the operations that he carried out has been to put up, for all practical purposes, a new building in place of the old building, and, if so, the portion let to the defendants, namely, the godown in suit, is a part of the new building. The whole building was practically re-walled, re-floored and re-roofed and a new Chowk to bring in more light and air was made. Free ventilation has been provided, and access to the D'Souza Street has been given. Most of the old beams and joists were removed and new ones put in, and one can fairly say that there was now a new building. Taking the godown itself, the west and north walls are new. A large proportion of the posts, beams and joists in the godown is new, and the ceiling is also practically new. The floor of the godown has been re-laid. The present godown has more light and air than the old one and has now access into the D'Souza Street over the Ota constructed on the 36 square yards of the land added to the building. If, then, the premises in suit were not the premises that were let to Narandas on 1st of January 1916, the rent then paid by him cannot be regarded as the standard rent for the godown in suit. The standard rent is the rent at which these new premises were first let after the 1st of January 1916. They were so let by Keshavji Damji to the present plaintiffs at the rent of Rs. 305 per month. But it is contended that, assuming that these are new premises and they were not let on the 1st of January 1916, the letting by the plaintiffs to the defendants at Rs. 275 per month should be taken, as between them, as the rent at which the premises were first let, after the 1st of January 1916, within the meaning of section 2 (a) (ii) of the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act. This involves the contention that there can be different standard rents for the same premises as between different individuals, and that, while the standard rent between Keshavji and the plaintiffs for these premises may be Rs. 305 per month, the standard rent as between the plaintiffs and the defendants is Rs. 275. This contention is based on the definition of the expressions 'landlord' and 'tenant' in the Rent Act. 'Landlord,' according to the definition, includes a tenant who sub-lets any premises, and the expression 'tenant' includes a sub-tenant. The argument is that, as between a tenant who is a landlord according to this definition and his sub-tenant who is regarded as tenant for this purpose, the letting to be looked to is the letting by the tenant to the sub-tenant. The only object, to my mind, of including in the definition of 'landlord' a tenant, and in the definition of 'tenant' a sub-tenant, is to extend the benefits of the Rent Act to sub-tenants, but I do not think that it was intended that the standard rent was to be determined by different standards between the original landlord and the tenant and between the tenant and the sub-tenant. Otherwise, the tenant, while himself getting the advantage of the Rent Act, would be able to profiteer as between himself and the sub-tenant. Supposing a tenant took certain premises in 1917 for a monthly rent of Rs. 200, and then sub let them for Rs. 300 to another person, after the coming into operation of the Rent Act, he would be entitled to claim that he was liable to pay only the rent at which the premises were let on the 1st of January 1916 which, let us suppose, was Rs. 100 a month, while the sub-tenant would be obliged to pay to him Rs. 300, that being the rent at which the premises were first let after the 1st of January 1916, as between them. In section 2 (a) (i) "standard rent" in relation to any premises is defined as the rent at which the premises were let (not sub let) on the 1st of January 1916. With reference to premises that were or shall be first let after the 1st of January 1916, standard rent is the rent at which they were or shall be first let (not sub-let). 'Standard' means a rule or a model and can only be one. The whole object of the Rent Act is to prevent tenants being made to pay rent which the Legislature considers excessive or unreasonable. In regard to the same premises, rent which the law regards as unreasonable or excessive between the original landlord and tenant ought not to be regarded as reasonable between the tenant and the sub-tenant. Similarly, rent which the law regards as reasonable between the original landlord and tenant ought not to be regarded as unreasonable between the tenant and the sub-tenant. Standard rent must, I think, mean the rent at which the premises were originally let. The standard rent is to be fixed in relation to premises and not in relation to persons, and can, therefore, be only one and not varying as between different individuals. In the case of King v. York (1)

the Court of Appeal in dealing with the provisions of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest Act, 1915, said: "The Act applied to houses, not to persons. The Act operated in rem, not in personam. It stereotyped the rent of a house." The present case is no doubt somewhat peculiar, because the original tenants (the plaintiffs) took the premises at a rent of Rs. 305 per month and sublet them to the defendants at a reduced rent of Rs. 275. Such cases will always be rare; ordinarily, there will be cases of sub-tenants taking premises at an enhanced rent or the same rent as the tenant is paying. If the standard rent in relation to these premises is Rs. 205, being the rent at which they were first let after 1st of January 1916, then the defendants are liable to pay that rent. There will be a decree for the plaintiffs as prayed with costs and interest on judgment at 6 per cent.

An order made by a Single Judge of the High Court under clause 13 of the Letters Patent, transferring a suit from the Calcutta Small Cause Court to the High Court for trial, is not a judgment within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent, and is consequently not appealable. [p 964, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACCT. C. J.—This is an appeal against an order made by Mr. Justice Greaves, under clause 13 of the Letters Patent, for the transfer of a claim, suit—from the Calcutta Small Cause Court to this Court.

A preliminary objection has been taken on behalf of the respondent that the appeal is incompetent, inasmuch as the order is not a "judgment" within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent.

There can be no question, in our opinion, that the proceeding which has been transferred is a suit within the meaning of clause 13 of the Letters Patent. It was pointed out by Mr. Justice Wilson in the case of Ismail Solomon Bhamji v. Mahomed Khan (1), that, under the Rules of Small Cause Court, claims are not tried summarily; they are dealt with just as suits are; and we find that the proceeding is described and is numbered as a suit pending in the Calcutta Court of Small Causes. The only question consequently is, whether the order of transfer is a "judgment." We are of opinion that the answer must be in the negative.

In the case of the Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. The Oriental Gas Company (2), Sir Richard Couch, C. J., said: "We think that 'judgment' in clause 15 means a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties determining some right or liability. It may be either final, or preliminary or interlocutory, the difference between them being that a final judgment determines the whole cause or suit, and a preliminary or interlocutory judgment determines only a part of it, leaving other matters to be determined." In the case before us, the order for transfer does not involve a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties, nor does it determine some right or liability. We do not overlook the later decision in the case of Hadjee Ismail Hadjee Hubbeeb v. Hadjee Mahomed Hadjee Joosub (3), where it was ruled that an order granting leave to sue, to the plaintiff, under clause 12 of the Letters Patent, is a "judgment" and is appealable under clause 15. It was explained that an order granting leave to sue was not a mere formal order or an order merely regulating the procedure in the suit, but one that had the effect of ving a jurisdiction to the Court which it otherwise would not have and, from this point of view, it might fairly be said to determine some right between the parties, namely, the right to sue in a particular Court, and to compel the defendants who were not within its jurisdiction to come in and defend the suit, or, if they did not, to make them liable to have a decree passed against them in their absence. These reasons, obviously, are not applicable to a case of the description now before us.

It has been contended, however, that the order under appeal not only directs the transfer of the suit, but also declares that the defendant firm will be at liberty to proceed with the sale in execution of the decree of the Small Cause Court, made in a previous suit. This declaration is merely ancillary to the order for transfer, and cannot be deemed appealable irrespective of the character of the primary order. We are accordingly of opinion, upon a construction of clauses 13 and 15, that the order is not appealable.

It is worthy of mention that our attention has not been drawn to any case in which an appeal has been entertained from an order of this description. Orders for transfer have frequently been made for years past and many of them are to be found in the reports: but there is no trace that an appeal has ever been successfully maintained against an order for transfer under clause 13 of the Letters Patent.

The result is, that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

FITCHER, J.—I agree.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.

for the Respondent, to show cause.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The petitioners were assessed on the 30th October 1919 under the Excess Profits Duty Act (X of 1919) in the amount of Rs. 6,48,379.4-0 and received due notice thereof from the Collector of Income Tax (Exhibit B). Thereupon the petitioners presented an appeal against the said assessment to the Chief Revenue Authority claiming that they were entitled to be held exempt from assessment. The appeal was heard on the 3rd August 1920, when the assessment of the Collector of Income Tax was confirmed. The petitioners requested the Chief Revenue Authority to state a case for the opinion of the High Court but on the 11th August the Chief Revenue Authority wrote that a reference to the High Court had been deemed unnecessary.

On the 20th August the petitioners obtained a Rule calling upon the Chief Revenue Authority to show cause why he should not be ordered to refer to this Hon'ble Court for its decision the questions set out in Exhibit D to the petition and the question, whether the cash and investments referred to in paragraph 8 of the petition should be taken into consideration for purposes of excess profits duty, together with his opinion upon those questions, or, in the alternative, why the Chief Revenue Authority should not be ordered to hear and determine according to law the petitioners' application to refer the above questions to this Hon'ble Court. The alternative prayer seems unnecessary. An affidavit in reply has been put in annexing the decision of the Chief Revenue Authority to the effect that the reference asked for was quite unnecessary as the provisions of section 6 of the Act, and Schedule II thereto, were absolutely clear on the point.

Section 45 of the Specific Relief Act provides that—"The High Court may make an order requiring any specific act to be done or forbore within the local limits of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction by any person holding a public office :

"Provided (a) That an application for such order be made by some person whose property franchise or personal right would be injured by the forbearing or doing of the said specific act.

"(b) That such doing or forbearing is under any law for the time being in force clearly incumbent on such person in his public character.

"(c) That in the opinion of the High Court such doing or forbearing is consonant to right and justice.

"(d) That the applicant has no other specific and adequate legal remedy. And

"(e) That the remedy given by the order applied for will be complete."

Act X of 1919 is an Act to impose a duty on excess profits arising out of certain businesses, and it is admitted that the Act applies to the business carried on by the petitioners. Sections 5 and 6 provide for the methods in which the excess profits are to be ascertained for the purposes of assessment.

Section 7 gives the Collector power to make allowances for special circumstances.

Section 8 provides for an appeal to the Chief Revenue Authority against the decision of the Collector on an application under section 7. The decision of the Chief Revenue Authority is final.

Section 15 provides that certain sections of the Indian Income Tax Act (VII of 1918), including sections 10 to 52, shall apply as if they referred to excess profits duty instead of to income tax.

Section 51 of the Indian Income Tax Act (VII of 1918) provides that if, in the course of any assessment under the Act, a question has arisen with reference to the interpretation of any provision of the Act or of any rule thereunder, the Chief Revenue Authority shall refer any such question on the application of the assessee with its own opinion thereon to the High Court, unless it is satisfied that the application is frivolous or that a reference is unnecessary.

The wording of the section is not very satisfactory. On a strict construction the Chief Revenue Authority could always avoid referring a question on the application of the assessee by saying it was satisfied the reference was unnecessary, and then it would be difficult for the Court to hold that it was incumbent under the Act for the Chief Revenue Authority to refer the question. I think, however, it would be open to the Court to consider the grounds on which the Chief Revenue Authority was satisfied that a reference was unnecessary. For instance, if a question arose with regard to the interpretation of a section which was so complex, so intricate, that it was clearly advisable that the question should be finally determined by a Judicial Authority rather than by the Chief Revenue Authority, I doubt whether that Authority would be justified in saying that it was satisfied that a reference was unnecessary. In order, therefore, to decide whether, in this case, the Chief Revenue Authority had reasonable grounds for being satisfied that a reference with regard to the questions which had arisen was unnecessary, we must consider the sections of the Act which provide for the assessment of excess profits duty.

Section 2 defines the accounting period as the twelve months ending the 31st March 1919, or, if the accounts of the business have been made up within the twelve months for the purpose of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1918, in respect of a year ending on any date other than 31st March, then the year ending on that date.

Section 4 imposes a duty of 50 per cent. on the amount by which the profits in the accounting period exceed the standard profits.

BOMBAY AND PERSIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY, LIMITED, In the matter of THE.

Section 6 (1) (a) and (b) prescribe various methods for calculating standard profits. If they are calculated under (b), there is a proviso that, if, the average capital employed in the business in the years adopted for the purpose of determining the standard profits is less or more than the capital so employed at the end of the accounting period, there shall be made to or from the standard profits an addition or deduction, as the case may be, which shall bear to the standard profits the same proportion as such decrease or increase of capital bears to the average capital so employed in the year so adopted. For the purpose of ascertaining the average capital, the capital employed in the business in any year shall be deemed the capital so employed at the end of that year.

By sub-section (4) no increase of capital made after the 31st December 1918 shall be taken into account in any case and no such increase before that date shall be taken into account, when it appears, or to the extent to which it appears, that the increase was made with intent to evade or has the effect of evading the payment of the excess profits duty. To take, therefore, a concrete instance, if the standard profits are one lac on an average capital of ten lacs, and the capital at the end of the accounting period is twenty lacs then the standard profits will be increased to two lacs. It is obvious, then, that the more the capital at the end of the accounting period can be increased, the greater the addition to the standard profits, with a corresponding decrease in the amount on which the excess profits duty can be levied.

Schedule II to the Act prescribes how capital is to be ascertained:

"1. The amount of the capital of a business shall, so far as it does not consist of money, be taken to be—"(a) So far as it consists of assets acquired by purchase, the price at which these assets were acquired, subject to any proper deduction for depreciation or for unpaid purchase money.

"(b) So far as it consists due to the business, the nominal amount of those debts subject to any deduction which has been allowed or is allowable in respect of those debts under the Indian Income Tax Act, 1918. And

"(c) So far as it consists of any other assets which have not been acquired by purchase, the value of the assets at the time they became assets of the business, subject to any proper deduction for depreciation.

"Any borrowed money or trade debt shall be deducted in computing the amount of capital for the purposes of this Act."

Then there is the proviso which has given rise to the matter in dispute in this case.

Accumulated profits, other than those made in the accounting period, would, in the ordinary course, remain to the credit of the profit and loss account and would not be capital, but nothing in the provisions regarding the ascertainment of the capital of a business is to prevent accumulated profits being treated as capital if they are employed in the business.

Now, the petitioners' balance-sheet for the year ending the 31st December 1918 shows a total of 119 lacs, odd, for cash and investments. No doubt a portion of this amount was required to meet recognised liabilities appearing on the other side of the balance-sheet, but it is equally clear, and I do not think the petitioners dispute it, that some portion of this amount represented accumulated profits for the years prior to the accounting period. Those profits, which are not employed in the business, cannot be treated as capital for the purposes of the Act. There is nothing, therefore, with regard to the interpretation of Schedule II which can give rise to any difficulty. Assuming that the questions were referred to us, what is the proper interpretation of the proviso to clause (1) of the Second Schedule, we could only say that accumulated profits cannot be treated as capital unless they are employed in the business. Whether or not they are employed in the business, is a question of fact which the Chief Revenue Authority is entitled to decide on the materials before it.

The petitioners claimed that the whole of their cash and investments were employed in the business. They made no attempt to assist the Collector or Chief Revenue Authority in deciding how much was employed in the business with the result that a haphazard guess was made at the amount, instead of employing proper accounting methods. The question which the petitioners formulated in their letter of the 5th August to the Chief Revenue Authority, were really questions for a Chartered Accountant and not questions with regard to the interpretation of the Act. Supposing those questions were before the Court, they could only be answered with the assistance of experts. But it may be permissible to make a few remarks on the facts as presented to us. Ordinarily speaking, the excess in a balance-sheet of assets over liabilities is profit. On the balance sheet produced before us that excess is over sixty lacs, if the reserve fund is not considered as a liability since it represents past profits which have not been distributed. But if the ships are valued as the petitioners wish them to be valued for the purpose of increasing the capital as at the end of the accounting period, the profits would be over rupees eighty-six lacs including, of course, the profits earned during the accounting period. This amount is actually represented by cash and investments; and could be distributed among the share holders by way of dividend. If, however, it was represented by ships, even though they were purchased at the end of the accounting period, it would be profit employed in the business.

As on the 31st December 1918 it had not been so employed, it cannot be argued that it makes no difference so long as it was intended to be employed. The Act does not say that profits intended to be employed in the business can be treated as capital. We have not got the calculations before us on which the Collector came to the conclusion that the capital at the end of the accounting period was twenty-four lacs, but the best advice I can give the petitioners is that they should ask the Collector or the Chief Revenue Authority to re-consider its decision, and, instead of adopting an absolutely impossible attitude in calculating the capital, to satisfy him by proper accounting methods what part of the accumulated profits now represented by investments are actually employed in the business.

In my opinion, the Chief Revenue Authority had reasonable grounds for being satisfied that it was unnecessary to refer to the High Court the questions which had arisen with regard to the interpretation of the Act and the Rule should be discharged with costs.

Fawcett, J.—I agree that it has not been shown to be "clearly incumbent on" the Chief Revenue Authority to refer the questions mentioned in this petition under section 51 of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1918, and that the Rule should be discharged with costs.

The words "employed in the business" in the proviso to rule 1 of Schedule II to the Excess Profits Duty Act, 1919, prima facie bear their natural meaning of "actually employed in the business", and cannot properly be construed as if the words were "employed or intended to be employed in the business." If the latter had been intended, they would presumably have been used, just as they are used in Schedule D, Cases I and II, rule 3 (f) of the English Income Tax Act, 1918, which specifies "any sum employed or intended to be employed as capital in such trade profession, employment or vocation."

In my opinion, the interpretation put on the proviso by the Chief Revenue Authority is correct, and he had reasonable grounds for being satisfied that it was unnecessary to make the reference to the High Court, which the petitioners asked for.

JUDGMENT.

FAWCETT, J. C.—In 1909 a partnership was entered into between one Chimansing and his son Narainsing with some other persons for carrying out Government contracts. It has been held by both the lower Courts that the plaintiff-respondent was a sub partner of Chimansing and Narainsing. Under the main partnership agreement, the partnership was due to terminate on the 30th of June 1911, and (as shown by the judgment which has been admitted in evidence in the appeal as Exhibit 11) has been held to have actually terminated on the 30th of March 1911. Plaintiff-respondent filed a suit in 1912 against Narainsing and the legal representatives of Chimansing, claiming accounts on the basis of his being their sub partner. In this suit he also impleaded the other main partners. Objection was taken to their being joined in this suit and it was also contended that the suit was premature. The Trial Judge held that the other partners were not necessary parties in the suit, but there was no objection to their being joined, and that this was desirable in their interests, so that the main partnership accounts could be enquired into in their presence. He also held that the suit was not premature. Accordingly, he passed a preliminary decree declaring the plaintiff to be entitled to take accounts and to receive his share out of the share belonging to Narainsing and Chimansing. On appeal to the District Court, the Assistant Judge held that the suit was not premature but that the suit lay against plaintiff's own partner and not against any of the other partners of the main partnership. He, accordingly, modified the lower Court's decree by expunging the names of those defendants from it.

In this second appeal, two points have been taken. The first is that, until the accounts of the main partnership are settled, the plaintiff has no cause of action against the appellants in regard to the sub partnership. The law in regard to a case like the present is dealt with in Ohidambaram Ohetty v. Karuthan Ohetty (1). I agree with the view there taken that, there being nothing in the Indian Contract Act on this subject, we should have regard to the law contained in section 31 of the English Partnership Act. It was urged that the section did not cover the case of a sub partner like the plaintiff, but only the case of an assignee of a share in a partnership. But a sub partner is, in fact, an assignee of a share in the partnership. In this particular case the plaintiff is the assignee of a 6-pie share out of the appellant's share of Rs. 1-3, and there is, in my opinion, no ground for distinguishing the case of a sub partner from that of an assignee, as the Judge did in the lower Appellate Court. Accordingly, it follows that the plaintiff is entitled only to receive the share of profits to which the appellants are entitled in the main partnership accounts, and that he must accept the account of profits agreed to by the partners. Also, as laid down in sub-section (2) of that section, in the case of dissolution of partnership, he is entitled to receive his share of the partnership assets to which the assigning partner is entitled as between him and the other partners and, for the purpose of ascertaining that share, to an account as from the date of the dissolution. The present suit was filed after the partnership was dissolved, whether that date be taken as the 30th March 1911 or 30th June 1911; and he has clearly under the provisions, as I have referred to, a cause of action for an account as against the appellants. I, therefore, agree with the view taken by the lower Court that the suit is not premature.

The second point raised was that, as a sub partner, he must accept the accounts in the main partnership as settled between the partners of that partnership unless he can show that the accounts have been taken wrongly or mala fide. This contention is, in my opinion, correct. It follows from the provisions of section 31 of the English Partnership Act and the English cases on the subject, which are cited in the case of Ohidambaram Ohetty v. Karuthan Ohetty (1), already mentioned. The decree which has been given to the plaintiff respondent does not specifically limit his right to an account so as to conform with the law just mentioned. I would, therefore, vary the decree by adding a clause that, if the main partnership accounts have been taken in either of the suits pending in regard to them or have been otherwise settled, the amount for which appellants are held to be entitled in those accounts will have to be accepted by the plaintiff-respondent, unless he can prove that the accounts have been taken or settled wrongly or mala fide. But I do not mean he necessarily should wait until the main partnership accounts are settled, for the plaintiff-respondent can no doubt adduce evidence in regard to the share of the appellants.

(1) 34 Ind. Cas. 543; (1916) 2 M. W. N. 18; 4 L. W. 10; 20 M. T. 134.

A third point which has been referred to in the arguments, is the date on which the main partnership should be deemed to have terminated for the purpose of the account to which the plaintiff-respondent is entitled. On the one hand, it is urged that it has been held to be the 30th March 1911, and, on the other, that this was an arrangement not binding upon the plaintiff-respondent, who became a sub-partner of the appellants on the understanding that the partnership would extend to 30th of June 1911. For the purpose of preventing any further litigation on this point, we think it desirable to say that we see no reason to interfere with the finding of both the lower Courts that, so far as the plaintiff is concerned, the partnership should be taken as dissolved on the 30th of June 1911, although another date has been accepted in the suits about the main partnership accounts. That date, no doubt, is correct on the particular facts, but at the same time it is based on a technicality rather than on any actual closing of the partnership, and we do not think that the plaintiff respondent should be prejudiced thereby in the account to which, subject to the limitation I have mentioned, he is entitled.

In the circumstances of the case, we allow appellants 1/3rd of their costs from the respondent, and respondent 2/3rds of his costs from the appellants.

KEPP, A. J. C.—This is an appeal against the lower Appellate Court's decree in favour of the plaintiff respondent in a suit filed by him as sub partner against his partner and his partner's partners. The suit arose under the following circumstances :

There were three groups of main partners, Chimansing and his son Narainsing, Asudmal and his son Fatechand, and Hasenand and Dewan Wadhumal. The main partnership was entered into on the 23rd August 1903 for a period to end on the 30th June 1911. The sub-partnership agreement was between the plaintiff and the 1st group of main partners, Chimansing and Narainsing, and the plaintiff brought his suit in 1912 impleading all the partners of the main partnership.

Now it is not, to my mind, clear from the pleadings exactly, whether the plaintiff asked the Court to take the main partnership accounts or whether he was asking that those accounts should be taken merely as incidental to an account between himself and his own partner. But having regard to the laxity with which pleadings in the Mufassil are very often drawn, I am willing to infer from these particular pleadings that what the plaintiff sought was an account against his own partner and, with the view of taking that account, he required his own partner should render an account of the main partnership. That being so, there is nothing, to my mind, which prevents a sub-partner suing his own particular partner for an account.

Then, it is contended that that account should be taken as of the 30th March 1911 on which date the main partners entered into an agreement to continue their partnership up to the 30th June 1914. But the plaintiff's answer to this contention is to my mind correct, viz., that his agreement with his own immediate partner was that the sub-partnership should continue until the 30th June 1911, and his own partner cannot by any arrangement with the partners in the main partnership affect the plaintiff's rights. Moreover, I doubt very much whether there was an interruption of the main partnership on the 30th March 1911. It is doubtful if what took place on that date cannot be regarded merely as a continuation of the original partnership with an agreement to extend it for a period beyond the date when the main partners had previously agreed that it should terminate.

I, therefore, agree with the order proposed by my learned brother.

G. obtained from E a lease of certain premises, one of the conditions of the lease being that the lessee could not sub-let without the consent of the lessor. Contrary to these terms, G. sub-let the premises to W. whereupon E. brought a suit for possession against G. and obtained a decree. In attempting to obtain possession E. was resisted by W. and he thereupon applied under Order XXI, rule 97 of the Civil Procedure Code, complaining of the resistance. W. contended that he was in possession on his own account and that the decree could not be enforced against him in a summary procedure under Order XXI:

Held, that as W.'s tenancy began before the suit for possession was instituted, E.'s remedy was by a suit against him. [p. 971, col. 2.]

An action for possession based upon forfeiture of a term should, for practical reasons, be brought against all persons in possession, including constructive possession, at the date of the suit. [p. 971, col. 2.]

Mr. A. A. Austoom, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. L. P. E. Pugh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This suit was instituted on the 7th July 1919 by lessor against lessee for recovery of possession of certain premises upon the determination of the term by forfeiture for breach of conditions in the lease. The suit was contested by the lessee unsuccessfully, and an order for recovery of possession was made on 14th December 1919, by which the lessee was given until the 29th February 1920, to make over possession. This not being done, an order, dated 12th March 1920, was obtained by the lessor directing the Sheriff to put him into possession. The Sheriff, on the 8th April 1920, was obstructed in the execution of this order by a Mrs. Wallace who is respondent to the present application made by the lessor before me as the Judge in Chambers.

Mr. Pugh, who appears for Mrs. Wallace, admits that his client holds as a tenant under the defendant in the suit. He does not file any affidavit on her behalf; but he says that she was in possession as under tenant before the suit was instituted and he indicates a desire to contend, or at least a willingness to allege, (on what grounds I do not know) that the suit was collusive. Mr. Austoom, for the lessor, contends that, though not a party to the suit, Mrs. Wallace is bound by the decree whether her tenancy began before or after action brought, that she is in law a privy though not a party, and her under-tenancy has determined by the forfeiture of the lease.

It is not absolutely necessary to join as defendants all persons in possession: in some circumstances it may be wrong and oppressive so to do: Geen v. Herring (1). The risk taken by omitting to join any such person is the risk that after decree he may set up a right to possession, independently of the lease which has become forfeited, whether by equity against the lessor or by other adverse title. This, however, is the extent of the risk and, apart from the Code, I should have no difficulty in enforcing this decree against Mrs. Wallace, her estate or interest having come to an end with the forfeiture of the lease [Minet v. Johnson (2)] and there being no tittle of evidence before me as to the action having been collusive.

There is nothing, however, in the least paradoxical in the suggestion that, in order to get an effective right to actual possession through the Sheriff, a plaintiff must make all persons defendants who were in possession at the date of his suit. This used to be the law in England, and there may well be special reasons in favour of insisting on this rule in India. I have to see what the Code provides.

Mr. Pugh's first point is, that the respondent comes within rule 36 of Order XXI and that the plaintiff has wrongly obtained the order of 12th March 1920 under rule 35. I do not think there is anything wrong with the order. The rules in question are simply directed to the form of possession which the Court will give to a plaintiff. The rights established by any decree are established inter partes and are always liable to be denied by strangers claiming an interest; but if the plaintiff has obtained a decree on the footing of which he is entitled to actual possession and not merely to the form of possession appropriate to a reversion expectant upon another's occupancy right, an order made under rule 35 is not bad or void. The question is simply whether that order can be enforced against the person objecting to its operation. The answer to this question must, I think, be given as far as any summary procedure is concerned, by looking first to rules 97, 98 and 99 of the same Order. Rule 98 deals with two cases, viz., where the obstruction is occasioned without just cause, (1) by the judgment-debtor, (2) by some other person at his instigation. Rule 99 likewise deals with two cases of claimants in good faith: (1) persons claiming on their own account, (2) persons claiming on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor.

(2) (1891) 63 L. T. 507.

TULSIDAS DULOMAL v. WADERO ALLAHBUX KHAN.

Now, I am certainly not satisfied that the respondent was acting at the instigation of the lessee defendant against whom the decree was passed. I cannot, therefore, act under rule 98.

As regards rule 99, if "claiming in good faith to be in possession" means "claiming in good faith to have a right to be in possession," I am not satisfied in the least of the respondent's good faith. In the absence of any affidavit by her, and knowing that she holds under the lessee, I think the suggestion that the suit was collusive points rather to bad faith than good. If, however, the words cited are satisfied by her being able to say truly that she is in possession as a matter of fact, I have no doubt of this nor is it contested; it is indeed admitted that she was in possession as an under-tenant in December 1919 at the time of the trial.

Now, in my opinion, rule 101, which deals with exactly the same class of person as rule 99, but deals with that class after and not before dispossession by the Sheriff, shows that the latter meaning of the words in rule 99 is the correct one. The Court has only to be satisfied that the respondent was in possession on her own account and it will restore her even after dispossession.

The only question which remains, so far as I can see, is whether this construction must be abandoned on the ground that it gives no meaning to the final words of the first clause of rule 35. In view of rule 102, and of the fact that persons taking an interest pendente lite are persons "bound by the decree", this objection falls to the ground. No doubt the draftsmanship of the Order is defective even as regards them, for such persons are not necessarily within rule 98 since they not always act at the instigation of the "judgment-debtor". This trouble, however, does not arise at present.

The result is that, in my view, an action for possession based upon forfeiture of a term should, for practical reasons, be brought against all persons in possession [including constructive possession, which seems to be covered by rule 99, Mancharam v. Fakirchand (3)], at the date of the suit: not that the suit is necessarily defective otherwise, but because the decree will be difficult to enforce under the Court.

Unless, therefore, Mr. Avetoom desires to contend that the respondent's tenancy began after the suit was instituted, I must make an order under rule 99 dismissing the plaintiff's application, and must leave him to his remedy by a suit against the respondent. Mr. Avetoom disclaiming this desire, I make the order under rule 99 with costs.

JUDGMENT.

FAWCETT, J. C.—In this case a decree was passed on a private arbitration award, under which certain properties were divided between the parties, and it was provided, amongst other things, that the clearance of a canal, called Galwah, would be effected by the plaintiffs-respondents who would recover a 14-annas, 7-pies share of the cost out of a total of 16-annas from the defendants at the time of beginning the work. The plaintiffs alleged that they had effected the clearance in accordance with the provision of this decree from 1903 to 1913 and claimed Rs. 3,000 as representing the defendant's share of the cost less Rs. 30 credited to the defendants for a certain item due to them. The Trial Court awarded them Rs. 577-5-10 disallowing all items incurred before 29th May 1914, the date of joining the third plaintiff, as time-barred under Article 61 of the Limitation Act, and some of the later items as either not being sufficiently proved or not being properly debitable to the defendants. The Assistant Judge, Sukkur, on appeal from this decision, held that Article 61 of the Limitation Act did not apply to the case, and that there being no other specific Article applicable, the suit was governed by the six years' rule under Article 120. Accordingly, he allowed the plaintiffs proved items from 29th May 1908, but concurred with the lower Court in its disallowing certain items subsequent to the 29th May 1911.

Defendants appeal from this decision, on the ground that the lower Appellate Court erred in not holding that the items prior to 29th May 1911 are time-barred. Mr. Tolasing in support of the appeal has urged that Article 61 applies or in the alternative Article 113, 115 or 65 is applicable. As regards the latter contention, I agree with the view taken in Somjimal v. Tulsonal (1), that a suit for recovery of money due under an award is not a suit for specific performance of a contract or for compensation for breach of contract, within the meaning of Articles 113, 115 and 116; and this conclusion also disposes of Article 65, which relates to a suit for compensation for breach of a certain promise.

The only question, therefore, is whether Article 61 applies in the present case. On this point it seems to me that the decision in Sri Raman Lalji Maharaj v. Gopal Lalji Maharaj (2) is one which strongly supports that contention. In that case the plaintiff and the defendants were liable in equal moieties for the expenses of a temple, and the plaintiff, alleging that he had paid more than his share of expenses, sued the other for the balance, in excess of the moiety for which he was liable. It was held that Article 61 applied. Another case that I think supports the contention is that of Sukhamoni Chaudhuri v. Ishan Chunder Roy (3). In that case plaintiff and defendant were co-owners of land subject to the payment of rent, and the owner of the rent obtained decrees for a large sum in arrears and the plaintiff, in order to save the estate from sale, paid off the claim of the decree-holder and then sued the defendant for contribution to the extent of defendants' share in the estate. The Indian Courts applied Article 61 and on appeal the Privy Council, without discussion, assumed that the Article applicable was 61. In the arguments the ruling in Sri Raman Lalji Maharaj v. Gopal Lalji Maharaj (2) was cited before their Lordships, and though they gave no definite decision on the point, yet the case does show, at any rate, that they saw no obvious reason for holding Article 61 to be inapplicable. There are also various other decisions of the High Courts, in which this Article has been held to be applicable to suits for contribution, and it may be noted that in this case we are not concerned with the question whether an involuntary payment comes under this Article, or whether it applies to a case where the amount is recovered by the sale of the plaintiff's property instead of being directly paid by the plaintiff. The words "for money payable to the plaintiff for money paid for the defendant" are very wide, and prima facie I can see no reason for holding that they do not cover a case like the present. Mr. Hirdaram for the respondents cited the case of Viswanadha V. Kumara Banga 100 v. B. G. Orr (4), as being against the appellant's contention. That was a case where the plaintiffs had executed certain necessary repairs to a tank which irrigated their lands and the defendants' lands and also the lands of other persons. After completing the repairs they filed a suit for contribution against the defendants, relying on section 70 of the Contract Act. It was held there that Article 120 and not Article 61 of the Limitation Act was applicable to the case. But it would seem from the judgment that that view was mainly based on the fact that it is an essential part of the cause of action under section 70 of the Contract Act that the defendants shall have received a benefit from what the plaintiffs have done. Mr. Justice Oldfield in his judgment points out that in certain cases where the benefit is immediate, the case can fall under Article 61, but distinguishes the case where the benefit will only arise at a subsequent stage, and the plaintiffs' cause of action will not be complete until the subsequent stage is reached. In the present case the award vests a right of recovery in the plaintiffs at the time of the beginning of the work, and, therefore, any payment made by them after the beginning of the work can clearly be held to be a payment made so far the defendants' share is concerned for the defendants; and the claim is based on the defendants' liability under the award decree and not on the application of the provisions of section 70 of the Contract Act. Therefore, I do not think that the ruling I have just mentioned is good authority for holding that Article 61 does not apply. The Assistant Judge in his judgment gives two reasons for saying Article 61 cannot apply. He says "firstly, the cause of action is not merely that the plaintiffs have paid this money for the defendants under circumstances from which the liability to re-pay arises without regard to any prior agreement, but that both the right to incur the expenses and the right to recover a certain share of them arose under a decree. I cannot myself understand why the fact that the liability of the defendants arises under a decree should prevent the application of Article 61 except, of course, so far the case might, therefore, fall under Article 99. But in cases where Article 99 does not apply, then I can see no sufficient reason for not applying the general Article 61. Nor is there anything in this Article which says that the liability to re-pay should arise without regard to any prior agreement. It seems to me that the ordinary case under Article 61 would be the result of some prior agreement. No authority in support of this view was brought to our notice in the arguments.

The second reason that he gives is that, "if Article 61 were applicable the limitation period would begin to run from the date of payment whereas in the present case the time for recovering the money has been fixed by the decree to be that when the clearance work is begun." This was supported by Mr. Hirdaram, but I agree with Mr. Tolasing that the fact that a different time is fixed in the award for the liability commencing to the time fixed in Article 61 for the period of limitation beginning to run is quite immaterial. The main factor of importance in deciding whether a particular suit falls under a particular Article of the Limitation Act is, the description of the suit in the first column of the First Schedule, and the description of the time from which the period begins to run in the third column could at most be an ancillary aid to the construction of the first column. Here the third column adds nothing to the description in the first column that affects its construction. In the circumstances of the present case, I think that the money that represented the defendants share of the clearance expenses was clearly money paid by the plaintiffs for the defendants, and I think the Trial Court was right in applying Article 61.

I would, therefore, reverse the lower Appellate Court's decree and restore that of the Subordinate Judge of Shikarpur with costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal preferred by the objectors against the judgment of the learned Additional District Judge of Dacca, dated the 19th July 1918, directing Letters of Administration with a copy of the Will annexed of one Rebati Mohan Saha Biswas to issue to the petitioner. Dr. Basak, who appears for the appellants, with his customary fairness admits that, having regard to the opinion of the learned Judge expressed in his judgment with reference to the oral evidence, it would not be possible for him to challenge the findings arrived at by the Court below. That is obviously so. The Judge had the opportunity of seeing the witnesses and examining their demeanour and, on a consideration of the facts, he arrived at a definite conclusion as to the credibility of the witnesses. That finding cannot be displaced. But the point that has been raised in support of the appeal is this: there was an executor named in the Will. The general citation went to the executor to be made a party to the proceedings. He did not appear. But still he was a party to the proceedings and the Will has been established. Now, the executor would strictly, in the first place, be the person to obtain Probate of the Will under the law. In this case, Letters of Administration with a copy of the Will annexed have been directed to issue to the respondent. The question that we have got to consider is—"Is the course adopted a right one?" Now, section 16 of the Probate and Administration Act provides that Letters of Administration in a case like this shall not be granted to any other person until a citation has been issued calling upon the executor to accept or renounce his executorship. Section 17 provides the manner in which the renunciation of the executorship is to be made. Section 18 provides that, if the executor renounce or fail to accept the executorship within the time limited for the acceptance or refusal thereof, the Will may be proved and Letters of Administration with a copy of the Will annexed may be granted to the person who would be entitled to administration in case of intestacy. It is not denied in this case that, up to the present, no special citation, such as is mentioned in section 16 of the Probate and Administration Act, has been issued. The citation issued on the executor was the ordinary citation to attend and watch the proceedings. The Will has been established in his presence, but the citation under section 16 has not issued. Now, what is to be done in a case like this? It is quite clear that the Judge was wrong in issuing Letters of Administration with a copy of the Will annexed, because he acted with clear disregard to the provisions of section 16 of the Probate and Administration Act. The point evidently was raised before the learned Judge, because it appears in his judgment and the remark that the learned Judge made thereon, was that he declined to consider the point in the case. We have to consider it and it seems to me that we ought to set aside the grant of Letters of Administration with the Will annexed. What ought now to be done is this: the executor was a party to the proceedings establishing the Will. The Will was clearly established in the presence of the parties, and, amongst others, the executor was served with a general citation to attend and watch the proceedings as a party to the suit, so the validity of the Will is established. It is quite clear that, unless and until the validity of the Will was established, the executor was not bound to accept or renounce his executorship. He could not be compelled to say whether he would accept or renounce the executorship until the Will was established. But once the Will was established, the executor is now bound to accept or renounce his executorship. The proper order would be to set aside so much of the order of the Court below as directs the issue of Letters of Administration in respect of the estate of the deceased with a copy of the Will annexed and in lieu thereof direct that Court to issue a special citation to the executor named in the Will as mentioned in section 16 of the Probate and Administration Act and, in the event of the executor renouncing or failing to accept the executorship within the time limited for the acceptance or refusal thereof, to issue Letters of Administration with a copy of the Will annexed to the present respondent, Rajlakshmi Dasi.

The only other question that we have got to deal with in this case is the question of costs. It is quite clear that the appellants were compelled to come here. They have got an interest in seeing that the executorship is entrusted to the person the testator selected. Moreover, the point raised in the appeal was raised before the learned Judge of the Court below and pressed on him; but the learned Judge said that he declined to consider it. Therefore, the appellants were compelled to prefer this appeal. In these circumstances, I am of opinion that both parties are entitled to recover their costs in this appeal out of the estate of the deceased. As regards the costs of the Court below, we see no reason to disturb the order made by the learned District Judge.

First appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge, Saharanpore, dated the 8th of March 1920.

Mr. Ibni-Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case sued for possession over a half share in a certain house. The defendants pleaded that, whether or not the plaintiff had a good title, neither she nor the transferors from whom she claimed had been in possession within 12 years of the institution of the suit. They further pleaded that they themselves had been in adverse possession for more than 12 years prior to the institution of the suit. The first Court dismissed the suit as barred by limitation, and that finding was upheld by the Court of first appeal. On second appeal a learned Judge of this Court held that the decision of the two Courts below had proceeded upon an erroneous view of the law. He treated the finding of the lower Appellate Court as amounting to nothing more than a finding that the plaintiff and her transferors had not been in actual possession within 12 years of the institution of the suit. He held that it had not yet been determined whether the plaintiff's transferors had been ousted by the defendants so as to set limitation running in favour of the latter and against the plaintiff and her transferors. On this view he set aside the decision of the lower Appellate Court and remanded the case to that Court under Order XLI, rule 23, of the Code of Civil Procedure, for a decision on the merits. The lower Appellate Court has now recorded a finding that the defendants have failed to prove ouster, i.e., the defendants have not satisfied the lower Appellate Court that their possession had become adverse to that of the plaintiff's vendors more than 12 years prior to the institution of this suit. Upon this finding the lower Appellate Court has set aside the decree of the Trial Court and has once more passed an order of remand under Order XLI, rule 23, of the Civil Procedure Code, directing the Trial Court to dispose of the suit on the merits, the issue of limitation being finally determined in favour of the plaintiff. The appeal before us is against this order of remand. The first point taken is, that the Court of first instance had found that the defendants had been in adverse possession and that this finding had been upheld by the lower Appellate Court before the second appeal to this Court was filed. In effect, we are asked to reconsider the correctness of the order of remand passed by the Single Judge of this Court when disposing of the second appeal. There is authority for the proposition that, where a Judge of this Court has remitted issues under Order XLI, rule 25 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the appeal subsequently comes up for disposal before another Judge, or a Bench of this Court differently constituted, the Bench which is seized of the appeal and on which the law casts the burden of finally disposing of the same is not bound by the order remitting the issues. It can consider the question whether that order was a proper one and, if it comes to the conclusion that that order should never have been passed, it can ignore the findings on the remanded issues and any evidence which may have been taken after the order remitting the said issues. The reason for this is obvious. No appeal lies against the order remitting issues, nor does that order dispose of the pending appeal. Consequently, the Tribunal which undertakes the responsibility of finally disposing of the appeal is seized of the entire case and has jurisdiction to reconsider the propriety of an interim order, such as that remitting issues, passed by another Judge, or by a Bench differently constituted. In the present case the Single Judge of this Court disposed of the appeal then pending before him finally by means of his order of remand, which was not under Order XLI, rule 25, but under Order XLI, rule 23, of the Civil Procedure Code. We have no responsibility for the result of that appeal. The decision of the Single Judge of this Court could have been challenged by appeal under the Letters Patent and was not so challenged. The principle laid down in section 105, clause (2), of the Civil Procedure Code, which prohibits a party, after submitting to an order of remand from which an appeal lay, from disputing its correctness at a later stage applies also to the case now before us. We are satisfied that the appellant is not entitled to challenge the correctness of the order of remand passed by this Court on the second appeal. As the case stands, this finding disposes of the appeal before us. Whatever may have happened previously the lower Appellate Court has now recorded a finding that adverse possession for 12 years prior to the institution of the suit is not proved on behalf of the defendants. That is a finding of fact which cannot be successfully impugned on any of the grounds taken in the memorandum of appeal before us. This appeal, therefore fails and we dismiss it accordingly with costs.

Mr. H. D. Bose, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Avetoom, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit brought in February 1917 by Dasarathy Sinha, who claims to be entitled to an undivided eight-annas interest in certain premises in Calcutta, known as No. 21, Harodhone Lane. The plaintiff's claim is made on these lines. He says that these premises belonged at one time to a joint Hindu family of which Jitram Rakhit and Ramsabek Rakhit were the members. The plaintiff has set out the various steps in his title, but these do not concern the present question until we come down to a conveyance, dated the 1st December 1911, from one Srimanto Kumar Datt to one Joygopal Pal. It appears that Joygopal had a vesting order made against him on two occasions under the Indian Insolvency Act, being the Imperial Statute 11 & 12 Victoria, Chapter 21 of 1848. According to the admissions made by the plaintiff's witnesses, and according to the original documents produced, these orders were made on the following dates, the first on the 2nd December 1899 and the second on the 4th May 1905. It appears that, in the case of neither insolvency, did Joygopal Pal get his final discharge, though in the first insolvency he got an order for his personal discharge on the 5th June 1900. After his death, namely, on the 25th August 1915, one Shabai Narain Pal took a conveyance of the premises in question from the administrator appointed by the Court to Joygopal Pal's estate. Shabai Narain Pal, according to the plaintiff's evidence, was a mere benamidar for himself, and it appears that on the 26th May 1916, he executed a deed of relinquishment to the plaintiff, thereby vesting in the plaintiff all the rights that accrued to the purchaser under the transaction of 25th August 1915.

The defendant is sued as a person in possession of an interest in the premises in question, and, according to the plaintiff's case, the defendant is a purchaser of the interest that at one time belonged to one Ram Sabek Rakhit and afterwards to his adopted son, Rajessar Rakhit. The issues in the case are, broadly speaking, the question whether the plaintiff can prove his title, and the question whether the plaintiff has been out of possession or the defendant in adverse possession for 12 years before the date of the institution of the suit.

The defence, so far as the allegations in the plaint are concerned, does not admit the various steps in title which the plaintiff has pleaded and it also raises the question whether the transactions were fictitious, but it does not in any way expressly refer to the fact of either of the two insolvencies of Joygopal Pal. Those insolvencies have apparently been brought to the notice of the defendant's advisers at a late stage, if not actually during the conduct of the plaintiff's case. In this state of things, at the end of the plaintiff's evidence and after he has closed his case, Mr. Avetoom, for the defendant, takes the point that, in view of the fact of these insolvencies under the Act of 1848, it appears that Joygopal's administrator had no title whatsoever to convey; that the title vested in the Official Assignee, and that, therefore, the plaintiff's case should be dismissed without calling upon the defendant, the ground being that the title has been shown to be vested in some one else according to the plaintiff's evidence.

I am going to consider this matter from two points of view. I am going to consider first, whether I ought, at this stage, to stop the case and dismiss the plaintiff's suit. If the answer to that question is in the negative, I will then proceed to consider what amendments, if any, I ought to allow Mr. Avetoom's clients to introduce into their pleading.

Now, the section of the Act of 1848 upon which the first question turns is section 7, and that section is one which runs upon very well known lines, or, more correctly, upon lines which, almost a hundred years ago, were very well-known in the Courts. The wording of it is as follows:—

DASARATHY SINHA v. MAHAMULYA ASH.

"That upon filing of any such petition as is aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the said Court and the said Court is hereby authorised and required to order that all the real and personal estate and effects of such petitioner, whether within the territories within the limits of the Charter of the East India Company or without, except the wearing apparel . . . . and all debts due to him and all the future estate, right, title, interest and trust of the said petitioner in or to any real or personal estate or effects within or without the said territories which such petitioner may purchase, or which may revert, descend, be devised or bequeathed, or come to him, and all debts growing due to him before the Court shall have made its order in the nature of a certificate as hereinafter mentioned, do vest in the Official Assignee for the time being of the said Court, and that all books . . . . in any way relating to such petitioner's estate and effects in his possession or under his custody or control, shall be deposited with such Assignee, and such order shall be entered of record in the said Court and such . . . . and shall instantly and without any conveyance or assignment, vest all the real and personal estate, effects, and debts as aforesaid . . . . and shall hold and stand possessed of the same for the purposes and in manner herein-after mentioned."

It is quite true that, on the face of this section, what may be called "after-acquired property" is just as much, and apparently just as quickly, vested in the Official Assignee as is the property which belongs to an insolvent at the moment when the bankruptcy commences. The words "shall instantly and without any conveyance or assignment" are directed to show that the older form of practice by which the Commissioner in Insolvency executed a deed of assignment in favour of Assignees is no longer to obtain under this Act of 1848. There is no doubt, however, upon the authorities that, although on the face of this section, "after-acquired property" and property acquired previous to insolvency appear to be on the same footing, there is in fact a substantial difference between the vesting in one case and the vesting in the other. That matter is now amply covered by authority, it is concluded by the authority, first of all, of the Privy Council in the case of

Moses Kerakoose v. Benjamin Brooks (1) and by later authority in the case of Kristocomul Mitter v. Suresh Ohunder Deb (2), by the decision of Fatimabibi v. Fatimabibi (3) and the case of Rowlandson v. Champion (4). All these cases agree in this—that the reasoning laid down in England in the case of Herbert v. Sayer (5), is applicable to the Act which I have now to construe. That being so, the first point which Mr. Bose takes is that, although in a case as between the Official Assignee or his assigns and the insolvent or some one claiming under him, as having acquired a right in "after acquired property," there may be a question whether the full doctrine, afterwards more precisely formulated or developed in the case of Cohen v. Mitchell (6), applies or does not apply to these transactions in Calcutta land, this much at all events is certain and is unchallenged by any case, viz, that it is not a defence which a stranger can take as against an insolvent or some one claiming under him, to say that the right in question was the "after acquired property" of an insolvent and is vested in the Official Assignee unless he also can plead and prove that the Official Assignee has intervened. The case of Herbert v. Sayer (5), which I have referred to, has apparently been some times thought to go the whole length afterwards covered by the decision of Cohen v. Mitchell (6). With that view I am not prepared to agree, but the exact point decided in Herbert v. Sayer (5), is the point which Mr. Bose takes. Herbert v. Sayer (5) was a decision as to the validity of a demurrer. The defendant in that case had taken a plea, viz, Plea No. 7, alleging the proceedings in bankruptcy, the appointment of the Official Assignee, the fact that the estate did not produce nor has as yet produced sufficient to pay off the creditors; that the bill of exchange sued upon was endorsed to the plaintiff and the cause or causes of action thereon accrued to him after the said signing and writing of the last certificate. In other words, what was pleaded is, that the plaintiff was suing upon the after-acquired right of an insolvent, and that the insolvent, having no rights of his own, could not maintain the action. Now, the exact decision of the Court upon that matter was that the insolvent had a good right except against the Assignees and that, as the plea did not state that they had interfered, it did not contain a complete defence. In other words, the Official Assignee himself and, of course, an assign from him may dispute the title which an insolvent has, or has purported to give, to his after-acquired property; no stranger may dispute that title except upon condition that he allege and prove that the Official Assignee has intervened.

Now, that question is an entirely different question to the one which arises in connection with the doctrine of Cohen v. Mitchell (6). In connection with that doctrine the questions that arise are, whether, at the time when the insolvent purported to give the right, the Official Assignee had intervened or not, and whether the purchaser from the insolvent took for value and in good faith. It may or may not be, either in England or in India, that certain interests in land are not within the scope of the doctrine of Cohen v. Mitchell (6). To my mind, it is another proposition and one unsupported, so far as I know, by any authority, to say that the narrower rule in Herbert v. Sayer (5) is subject to any exception in the case of land. In order that the rights given by the Statute in after-acquired property shall enure to creditors only and shall not be used by strangers to enlarge their own rights, any mere third person desiring to plead the bankruptcy as a defect in the title which an insolvent has purported to give to some one else in his after-acquired property, must show that the Official Assignee has intervened. There may be—I think there are—other reasons for preventing this very special kind of just tertii from being made to serve the ends of a stranger even in actions to which just tertii is in general a defence. But the reason stated applies to interest in land as fully as to any other interests; though it may well be that the reasons given in New Land Development Association and Gray, In re (7) for exempting certain interests in realty from the wider doctrine of Cohen v. Mitchell (6) were well-founded. The scope of that exemption has since been narrowed: Clayton and Barclay's Contract, In re (8), Kent County Gas Light and Coke Co. Ltd., In re (9) and its principle doubted (Official Receiver v. Cooke (10)); the exemption has finally been abolished by Statute so far as England is concerned. But, for my purpose, and with reference to the authorities binding upon me, the important thing to notice is that in no one of the cases has the rule in Herbert v. Sayer (5) been relaxed. Rawlandton v. Champion (4), Bird v. Philpott (11), Official Receiver v. Cooke (10) and London and County Contracts Ltd. v. Tallack (12) are cases where the Official Assignee or a purchaser from him was one of the parties.

On the first point, and for these reasons, it seems to me that it would be wrong of me to dismiss the plaintiff's action at the end of his evidence. I treat this for the moment not as a matter of pleading but as a matter of proof. There is not only no pleading before me, but there is no proof before me, that, at the date when this action was brought or indeed at any other date, the Official Assignee, in respect of this property, No. 21, Harodhone Lane, had ever intervened at all. That being so, I cannot stop the case at the end of the plaintiff's evidence, and I cannot now dismiss the action.

The action, therefore, must go on, and I have to consider Mr. Avetoom's application for leave to amend, and it is necessary for me to make up my mind as to what leave I propose to give. What I propose to do in that matter is this: I shall allow Mr. Avetoom by an amendment to raise the fact of each of those two insolvencies. I shall allow him also to aver and give him an opportunity of proving, if he can, that at any date down to the date of the bringing of this action, the Official Assignee had intervened, but I will not allow any amendment which alleges an intervention by the Official Assignee after the date on which this plaint was filed. My reason for that is, that if it is open still to the Official Assignee to claim the benefit of any judgment which the plaintiff may recover in this action, it is much better that that should be done in separate proceedings, and it may or may not be done in the Insolvency Court, but any such claim as that I am going to keep out of this action. It may well be that as between the plaintiff and the Official Assignee there are by this time many complicated questions. While I shall allow these defendants to allege specifically and found upon any intervention by the Official Assignee, before action brought, I am not going to allow this suit to be defeated by anything that the Official Assignee might do for the first time now. On those terms, if Mr. Aveloom's client produces in writing the amendment to the written statement which he proposes to make, I shall allow it. So far as the plaintiff is concerned, if there are any matters which require specific pleading after that, I shall be able to deal with that question later.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE NO. 173
OF 1918.

March 1, 1921.

Present:—Mr. Justice Das and Mr. Justice Ross.

RAMGULAM SAHU AND OTHERS—
APPELLANTS

versus

AND GAYA PERSHAD AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1903), O XXXII, s. 7—Compromise—Minor—Express approval of Court, whether necessary.

The sanction of the Court to a compromise on behalf of minor cannot be inferred merely from the facts that the petition of compromise gave notice to the Court that the interests of the minors were intended to be affected by the compromise, and that the Court passed a decree in accordance with the compromise. [p. 933, col. 2.]

The attention of the Court must expressly be drawn to the fact that the minors' interests are affected by the compromise and the approval of the Court must be obtained. [p. 934, cols 1 & 2]

It is only when leave is asked to settle the case on behalf of the minors that the vigilance of the Court is attracted and the Court is called upon to examine the terms of the settlement for the purpose of protecting the interests of the minors. [p. 932, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Chapra, dated the 1st August 1918.

Mr. Kulwant Sahai for Mr. Rajendra
Prasad and Mr. Sambhu Saran, for the Appellants.

for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This was a suit for partition. The material defence was that there was a previous suit for partition by Gaya Pershad, the father of the plaintiffs, on his own behalf and on behalf of the plaintiffs which was compromised on certain terms which are binding on the plaintiffs. To this the plaintiffs replied that they were not parties to the compromise decree at all and that, in fact, the previous suit was compromised in contravention of the express provision of Order XXII, rule 7, of the Code, that is to say, it was compromised without the leave of the Court having been obtained and that, accordingly, they are entitled to ignore the consent-decree and to ask to be placed in the same position which they occupied before that decree was passed.

In order to determine the point which has been argued before us at great length, it is necessary to deal with the antecedent events and to see how those events affect the plaintiffs.

In 1902 there was a suit by Gaya Pershad against Ramgulam Sahu and others for partition of joint family properties. That suit was compromised and a decree was passed in accordance with the petition of compromise. The petition of compromise ran as follows:—

"In the above suit a compromise has been made between the plaintiff and the defendants. Whatever property has been mentioned in the plaint is correct. The plaintiff has one-ninth share therein and he is in possession of his one ninth share jointly with the defendants. At present there is no necessity to have partition of his share under the amicable settlement arrived at, rather, possession will be held jointly. Hence your petitioners file this petition and pray that the plaintiff's possession over all the properties mentioned in the plaint to the extent of one ninth share may be declared. There is no necessity of partition. The plaintiff and the defendants will get the properties partitioned or will have partition made through the Court whenever they will like to do so afterwards. The parties will bear their own costs. Your petitioners pray that the suit may be decided in terms of this sulehnama and all the contents thereof may be entered in the decree. Be it known that this plaintiff shall have one-ninth of the ornaments, dues, cash money and asmindari that will be found under bahi khata at the time of partition and the defendants shall have no objection thereto."

This decree, it is conceded, did not effect a partition of the joint family properties; it determined the share of the plaintiffs and their father, Gaya Pershad, in the joint family properties, and its effect was to destroy the joint tenancy between the parties and to make them tenants in common. The plaintiffs and their father, Gaya Pershad, were entitled on the foot of this decree to institute a suit for partition and this suit they actually brought in 1905. At the time of this suit, the plaintiffs were minors and the suit was actually brought by Gaya Pershad on his behalf and on behalf of his minor sons, the plaintiffs in the present action. This suit again resulted in a consent-decree and we are in this appeal concerned with the validity of this consent decree so far as it affected the interests of the minors. The compromise petition was as follows:—

"Hail Oberisher of the Poor!

"In the above suit a compromise has been made between the plaintiffs and defendant No. 1. Details of the immoveable properties belonging to the plaintiff and the defendants and which are joint are given below. They are the joint properties of ... and are in possession of the plaintiffs and the defendants. The plaintiff's share therein is one ninth, so long they will remain joint, the plaintiffs shall have possession over the same to the extent of one-ninth share. When there will be partition, the plaintiffs will get a share of one-ninth after partition. In the remaining moveable properties belonging to the plaintiffs and the defendants the plaintiff's share has been declared to be one-ninth, equivalent to Rs. 7,002 in cash, gold ornaments 41 rupees, 4 annas in weight, and silver and rupa (alloyed silver) 602 rupees in weight. Out of the same plaintiff No. 1 received Rs. 3,501 in cash, gold ornaments, weighing 20 rupees 10 annas, and silver and rupa ornaments weighing 301 rupees from the defendants. The remaining cash money Rs. 3,501, gold ornaments 20 rupees 10 annas in weight and silver and rupa 301 rupees in weight due to plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 are deposited with defendants Nos. 1 and 4, under a sharkhati, signed by defendant No. 4. Defendants Nos. 1 and 4 will support and look after plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 in lieu of the interest of the money deposited. When plaintiff No. 2 will attain majority defendants Nos. 1 and 4 will give Rs. 1,750 8 0 gold ornaments 10 rupees 5 annas in weight and silver and rupa ornaments 150 rupees 8 annas in weight to him and they will give to plaintiff No. 3 Rs. 1,750 8 0 gold ornaments 10 rupees 8 annas in weight, and silver and rupa ornament 150 rupees 8 annas in weight when he will attain his majority. In case plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 do not live, plaintiff No. 1 shall have right to receive the money, gold and silver ornaments mentioned in the said sharkhat. Now the plaintiffs have no right remaining in any portion of other moveable properties excepting with Rs. 3,501 gold ornaments 20 rupees 10 annas in weight and silver and rupa (alloyed silver) 301 rupees in weight, deposited with defendants Nos. 1 and 4 under the sharkhat. Now there is no contention of any sort between the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 and 4. Hence your petitioners pray that a partition decree may be passed in terms of the sulehnama and the parties will bear their own costs."

It will be noticed that the effect of this consent-decree was to determine the actual value of the plaintiffs' share in the moveables; the immoveable properties were again left undivided. The Court passed a decree in accordance with the terms of settlement and it is now argued on behalf of the appellants that that decree must operate in bar of the plaintiffs' right to maintain the present action.

Order XXXII, rule 7, of the Code provides as follows:—

"No next friend or guardian for the suit shall, without the leave of the Court, expressly recorded in the proceedings, enter into any agreement or compromise on behalf of a minor with reference to the suit in which he acts as next friend or guardian. Any such agreement or compromise entered into without the leave of the Court so recorded shall be voidable against all parties other than the minor."

It is not pretended in this case that the leave of the Court was expressly recorded in these proceedings. But it is argued that we must assume that the Court did its duty and impliedly granted leave to the adult plaintiff, Gaya Pershad, to settle the case on behalf of the minor plaintiffs especially as the petition of compromise, on the face of it, dealt with the interests of the plaintiffs. Even if this argument is admissible in view of the express provision of the law in Order XXXII, rule 7, there is, in my opinion, evidence in the record suggesting an inference that the Court never intended to exercise its judgment on the question whether the settlement was for the benefit of the minors. There is nothing in the petition to suggest that the minors were parties to the compromise. No doubt, the compromise affected the interest of the minors in so far as it declared that the minor plaintiffs in that suit would get a certain proportion out of the share allotted to plaintiff No. 1. But if they were not parties to the compromise petition they would be wholly unaffected by the compromise and the Court would not be called upon to exercise its judgment on the question whether the compromise was for their benefit. There was no power in the Court to refuse to pass a decree in accordance with the settlement arrived at between Gaya Pershad and his father, Ramgulam Sahu; they were both sui juris, and it was competent to them to settle their disputes in any way they liked. It is only when leave is asked to settle the case on behalf of the minors that the vigilance of the Court is attracted and the Court is called upon to examine the terms of the settlement for the purpose of protecting the interests of the minors.

Now, in this case the petition was signed by Gaya Pershad and not by him on his own behalf and on behalf of the minors; in other words, the petition was the petition of plaintiff No. 1 in that case and was not the petition of plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3, who are the plaintiffs in the present case. The order-sheet of the learned Subordinate Judge suggests the inference that the compromise was between the plaintiff No. 1, Gaya Pershad, and defendant No. 1. On the 6th August 1906 the learned Subordinate Judge recorded the following order in the order-sheet: "Plaintiff and defendant No. 1 file compromise. Put up to-morrow for orders." The next day, that is to say, the 7th August the following order was recorded by the Subordinate Judge—"Petition of compromise filed yesterday by plaintiff No. 1 and defendant No. 1 taken up. Pleadings heard, the suit is decreed in terms of compromise (torn in original) defendant No. 1 only. The plaintiffs called upon to file non judicial stamp for drawing up decree within a week from this day, failing which the decree shall not be drawn up." It is unfortunate that the original document was torn at a very critical point but we are, of course, not entitled to draw any inference adverse to the appellant. But the order sheet both of the 6th August and 7th August 1906 certainly suggests the inference that the compromise was between the plaintiff No. 1 and defendant No. 1, and that the Court was dealing with the matter as a compromise between the plaintiff No. 1 and defendant No. 1. Mr. Kulwant Sahai relied on the fact that Pleadings were heard but in my view no argument can be built on so slender a foundation. Pleadings are heard whenever any compromise petition is filed, even though no minors are concerned in the compromise. In my view, it must follow, from a careful perusal of the petition of compromise and the order sheet in the case, that the Court did not think that it was called upon to exercise its judgment on the question whether the compromise was for the benefit of the minors. It must also be remembered that there was no petition by Gaya Pershad asking for the leave of the Court to compromise the case on behalf of the minors. In my view, it is impossible to hold, on these materials, that the learned Subordinate Judge was called upon or that he thought that he was called upon to protect the interests of the minors.

Order XXXII, rule 7, rests on the principle that a suit relating to the estate of an infant and for his benefit has the effect of making him a ward of Court and that no act can be done affecting the property of the minor unless under the express direction of the Court itself.

It was held by the Judicial Committee, so far back as 1871, that "where a compromise of a suit is made, it ought to be carried out by proper deeds and filed in Court, particularly where infants are concerned, so as to have the assent of the Court at the time instead of its being totally concealed from them;" see the case of Moulvie Abdool Ali v. Mczuffer Hossein Ohowdhry (1). It will be noticed that this decision was given before the Code of 1882 and it has been suggested that the Code of 1882 framed a section dealing with this point as a result of the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case cited.

In the case of Sharat Chunder Ghose v. Kartik Chunder Mitter (2), it was held by Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice O'Kinealy, that, "where a compromise of a suit is entered into on behalf of an infant defendant, the approval of the Court to such compromise must be express, and will not be inferred from the subsequent passing of a decree in terms of such compromise. Without such approval, the compromise will not bind the infant, and will be set aside at his instance." In this case the Court recorded no finding that the compromise was prejudicial to the interests of the minor, but merely on the finding that there was no express approval of the Court, it came to the conclusion that the consent-decree was not binding upon the minor and that he was entitled to be restored to the position which he occupied previous to the consent-decree.

(2) 9 O. 810; 12 O. L. R. 453; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1188.

In the case of Manohar Lal v. Jadunath Singh (3), the question was argued before the Judicial Committee; and it was contended that, as the compromise petition gave full notice to the Court that the interests of the minors were intended to be affected by the compromise, the compromise decree must be taken to have been made with the leave of the Court within the meaning of section 462, Civil Procedure Code. The Judicial Committee held that, "in order to show that the exigencies of the provisions of the section had been complied with there ought to be evidence that the attention of the Court was directly called to the fact that a minor was a party to the compromise; and it ought to be shown on petition, or in some way not open to doubt, that the leave of the Court was obtained. The mere facts that the minor was so described, and as appearing by a guardian, and that the compromise was before the Court were not sufficient." In my view these decisions establish the proposition that the sanction of the Court cannot be inferred merely from the facts that the petition of compromise gave notice to the Court that the interests of the minors were intended to be affected by the compromise and that the Court passed a decree in accordance with the compromise.

The last case of the Judicial Committee, the case of Ganesha Row v. Tulja Ram Row (4), supports this proposition. It must follow, therefore, that the plaintiffs are entitled to avoid a consent-decree.

Mr. Kulwant Sahai argues that this is not a suit to avoid the consent-decree but in my view the argument is unsubstantial. The plaintiffs state in the 7th paragraph of the plaint that no compromise was filed on behalf of the plaintiffs, and they submit that the decree is not binding on them. It is quite true that they have not asked for a relief that the consent-decree is not binding on them but in my view the question of relief is for the Court.

JOGESH CHANDRA ROY v. MAKBUL ALI.

Provided the material allegations are there, it is for the Court, and the Court alone, to give the plaintiffs appropriate relief in the circumstances of the case. All the allegations are in the plaint entitling the Court to say that the decree is not binding upon the plaintiffs. I am of opinion that the plaintiffs have established their case that the consent decree, so far as it affected their interests, does not bind them and that they are entitled to a partition of the joint family properties both moveable and immovable as they existed on the date of the suit.

Now, I ought to mention that one of the plaintiffs, Kalika Prasad, has compromised his claim with the defendants. We are, therefore, only concerned with the plaintiff No. 2 whose share in the joint family properties is one-twenty-seventh both in the moveables and immovables.

The Court below has found, on what principle we do not know, that the share of plaintiff No. 2 in the moveables is one-ninth. The decree of 1902 undoubtedly effected a separation between the parties and expressly stated that the share of Gaya Pershad and his sons, both in the moveables and immovables, was one-ninth. That decree must stand, and is wholly unaffected by any change that may have taken place in the constitution of the family subsequent to the date of that decree. The plaintiff is undoubtedly entitled to a partition by metes and bounds, but he can only sue on the basis of that decree. In accordance with that decree he is only entitled to one-third of one-ninth, that is to say, to one-twenty-seventh, both in the moveables and in the immovables.

We vary the decree of the lower Court to this extent that we award him one twenty-seventh both in the moveables and in the immovables. Subject to this variation, we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Ross, J.—I agree.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Chittagong, dated July 31st, 1918.

Sir Rosh Behary Ghose (with him Babus Dheerendralal Kaitgir and Saroenath Mukherji), for the Appellant.

Babu Bijitkari Ghose, Jr. (with him Babus Chandrasekhar Sen and Narendra Kumar Das), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—An estate, now vested in the plaintiff, the appellant before us, was originally held in two undivided moieties. The owner of one moiety granted a tenure thereof in favour of two persons, Fateh Ali Miji and Asauddin Miji, evidenced by a kabuliyat which they executed, dated the 1st Chaitra, 1271 (1865). In this document the tenure is referred to as an itmam. The other moiety was also held by the same two persons as a tenure, described as a taluk. It may be conceded to the plaintiff, as his case is, that the taluk was created orally at the same time as the itmam, though there is really no evidence how the taluk came into existence.

In 1878, after the death of Fateh Ali and Asauddin, the widow and grandson of the former and the widow and daughter of the latter conveyed the two tenures to Haider Ali, the predecessor in interest of the defendants.

The suit was brought on the basis that the terms and conditions of the itmam, as they appear in the kabuliyat of 1865, are inconsistent with the permanent tenure which the defendants claim. As to the taluk, the plaintiff's theory, rather a weak one, is, that it must be presumed to have been granted on the same terms as the itmam. There is more force in the argument for the defendants that the taluk is, prima facie, a permanent tenure, and that if there is any doubt as to the permanency of the itmam, it must be resolved in their favour. The plaintiff, acting on his view of his rights, treated both tenures as tenancies from year to year and served notice to quit on the defendants. They refused to quit and the present suit was brought to eject them. The appeal is from the decree of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the suit.

We concur in the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge.

As to the facts, we have already indicated that the tenures descended from Fateh Ali and Asauddin to their heirs. They passed by transfer from the latter to Haider Ali and have now devolved on Haider Ali's heirs and representatives. The rent has never been raised since 1865. The fact that rent receipts were granted "marfatdari" in the names of the original grantees is certainly not conclusive, in the present case, to show that the tenures were not transferable. A taluk is prima facie transferable and we shall hold on the construction of the kabuliyat of 1865 that the itmam is also of a transferable character.

There was some discussion whether the term "itmam," which is used in the heading of the kabuliyat and thrice in the body of the document, imports permanency. The term, it appears, may be applied to a raiyyati holding or to a tenure. In Amber Ali and Fannane's Tenancy Act (2nd Edition, page 807) it is stated that, in the permanently settled tracts of Chittagong, an "itmam" is transferable, heritable and held at a fixed rate of rent in perpetuity. In temporarily settled areas, the rent may be liable to enhancement, at any rate, when a fresh settlement is made. Jogesh Chandra Roy v. Makbul Ali (1). Reference may also be made to Mr. Allen's Settlement Report of 1888—898 for Chittagong (page 27), to his "Note upon Itmamdars and Dar-itmamdars in Chittagong, to be found in Volume V of the Selections from the Records of the Board of Revenue, L. P." (page 200, esp. page 225) and to the District Gazetteer of Chittagong (page 149). It may be that such reports and books are not, strictly speaking, evidence, or that they do not come or do not at all come within the scope of section 35 of the Evidence Act, but we see no objection to their being read for what they may be worth. Of Garuradhwa's Prasad v. Superundhwaja Prasad (2)] and Sir Rash Behary did not insist on the objection, which he rather suggested than argued. Our conclusion is that, as applied to a tenure in the permanently-settled parts of Chittagong, the word "itmam" primarily imports a permanent, heritable and transferable tenure. It is well settled that the word taluk primarily imports permanency. Sarada Kripalala v. Akhil Chandra Biswas (3), Upendralal Gupta v. Jogesh Chandra Roy (4). No doubt, the terms of a written instrument may be inconsistent with the ordinary implication of either term. Either term may be loosely or mistakenly applied to a tenure which is not in fact permanent and which does not become permanent merely because it is called a taluk or an itmam.

We pass to the kabuliyat. It is described as a "bandobasti kabuliyat" or settlement kabuliyat. Nothing turns on that. The lease was for an indefinite period and there are no words of limitation or inheritance: "We shall," say the grantees, "pay into your sarkar, year after year, the aforesaid jama (or rent) in accordance with the kists (or instalments) mentioned above." A lease from year to year is really out of the question. That being so, the strict rule seems to be that "if a grant be made to a man for an indefinite period, it enures, generally speaking, for his lifetime and passes no interest to his heirs, unless there are some words showing an intention to grant an hereditary interest." But "that rule of construction does not apply if the term for which the grant is made is fixed or can be definitely ascertained :"

Lekhraj Roy v. Kunhya Singh (5). The lease, therefore, endured at least for the lifetime of the grantees. Then there are words which go to indicate that a permanent lease was intended. The provisions of the Patni Regulation are expressly made applicable to the tenure and the tenure is described as an itmam. It was argued that, under section 8, the Regulation might be made applicable by agreement to a lease, for instance, for a long term of years. That may be so, but the preamble (section 1) shows that the Legislature were thinking of "leases at a rent fixed in perpetuity." Moreover, the lease in the present case is not a lease for a long term of years. It is absurd to suppose that the parties could ever have thought of applying the Regulation to a lease from year to year. As we have said, the plaintiff's suggestion of a lease from year to year cannot be entertained.

Much was made of the clause in which the grantees state that, without the grantor's permission, they will not be entitled to transfer the itmam to others. But there is no clause of re-entry. Such a condition against transfer is often inserted merely as a foundation for a claim to nazar (or premium) when a transfer is made, and if the condition is not, void or of no effect at all, it does not, in such a case as the present, render an assignment or transfer of the lease inoperative: Nil Madhab Sikdar v. Narattim Sikdar (6), Basarat Ali Khan v. Manirulla (7).

Regard being had to the terms of the kabuliyat of 1865 and to the history of the tenures, we are of opinion that they are permanent, heritable and transferable. The true title to the tenure is, therefore, in the defendants and no question of adverse possession arises.

The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff sued to get a sale-deed of the plaint-property executed, alleging that the defendant No. 1 had agreed to pass a sale-deed in his name on the 4th March 1917, but afterwards refused to convey the plaint property to the plaintiff. The 2nd defendant relied upon a sale-deed executed by the 1st defendant in his favour on the 19th January 1918. It is admitted that the plaintiff was in possession, and that the 2nd defendant knew that the plaintiff was in possession, and made no inquiry as to the circumstances in which the plaintiff was in possession.

The Trial Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the 2nd defendant had no notice, actual or constructive, of the contract between the 1st defendant and the plaintiff. The plaintiff had been in possession since 1914, and admittedly was a mortgagee. The learned Trial Judge seemed to think that, although defendant No. 2 might be fixed with notice of the plaintiff's possession as mortgagee, he could not be fixed with the notice of the agreement to sell. In appeal, this decision was confirmed. The same distinction was made by the learned Appellate Judge, namely, that the constructive notice would only be of the plaintiff's holding as mortgagee and not as a person having an agreement to sell from the 1st defendant.

Now in Mancharji Sorabi Ohulla v. Kongscoo (1) it was held by Chief Justice Cough that the English authorities on the question were applicable where a person bought an estate of which some one, not the vendor, had possession. The leading case cited was Daniels v. Davison (2), in which the Lord Chancellor held that—

"Where there was a tenant in possession under a lease, or an agreement, a person purchasing part of the estate, must be bound to inquire, on what terms that person was in possession...that this tenant being in possession under a lease, with an agreement in his pocket to become the purchaser, those circumstances altogether gave him an equity repelling the claim of a subsequent purchaser, who made no inquiry as to the nature of his possession."

That principle has been followed by a Bench of this Court in Sharfudin v. Govind (3). Mr. Justice Batty said at page 473:

"It appears to be the result of the Bombay decisions that no purchaser can protect himself merely by registering his document of title, against the title of a person in possession of the subject-matter, and if he ignores that possession and fails to make inquiry into its nature and origin, he will be affected by all the equities which the person in possession is proved to have. This being the case, I think that, when the plaintiff found that the property of which he bought the equity (of redemption) was in the possession of the defendants, it was for him to inquire into the nature of his vendor's title and the extent of the liabilities to which he was subject."

The result, therefore, must be that the 2nd defendant having knowledge of the plaintiff being in possession, and having made no inquiry why the plaintiff was in possession, must be taken to have had constructive notice of all the equities in favour of the plaintiff. It would have been a different matter if he had made inquiries and had been told that the plaintiff was only in possession as mortgagee, but if he chooses to make no inquiries at all, then he is liable to all the risks that might result from the discovery that the person in possession was entitled to equities against the vendor. The result, therefore, must be that the appeal must be allowed. The plaintiff will be entitled to a conveyance of the suit property from the 2nd defendant who has a registered sale-deed from the 1st defendant. The plaintiff will be entitled to his costs throughout.

Fawcett, J.—I concur. I would also refer to the 3rd illustration to clause (b) of section 27 of the Specific Relief Act, which authoritatively declares the law in accordance with the case of Daniels v. Davison (2). "A contracts to sell land to B for Rs. 5,000. B takes possession of the land. Afterwards A sells it to C for Rs. 6,000. C makes no inquiry of B relating to his interest in the land. B's possession is sufficient to affect C with notice of his interest and, he may enforce specific performance of the contract against C." Therefore, the lower Courts were not justified in making the distinction upon which they dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

Appeal allowed.

The moment an award is filed in Court by an arbitrator, it becomes enforceable as if it were a decree, and it is not necessary, before it is enforced, to show that notice of the fact of filing was given by the arbitrator to the parties concerned: the omission to give such notice would not destroy the operative character of the filed award. #### JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Greaves dismissing an application to set aside an award.

The contract between the parties provided for a reference to arbitration in the following terms: "Any dispute under the contract was to be finally settled by two European arbitrators appointed by buyers and sellers respectively or by an umpire in case of difference." The respondent appointed Mr. Appollonato as arbitrator and requested the appellant to nominate another arbitrator. The appellant did not respond, with the result that the arbitrator proceeded to deal with the matter in controversy. He gave notice that he would hold the arbitration on the 26th June 1919, and requested that any written statement intended to be sent should be sent before the date, and that the parties should be present on the appointed day with witnesses and documents. It was not till the day previous, that is, the 25th June 1919, that the appellant, through his Attorney, forwarded to the arbitrator his case; but on the date fixed there was no appearance on his behalf. The arbitrator, thereupon, made an ex parte award in favour of the respondent, which is now impeached on two grounds: first, that no notice that the award had been filed was given under subsection (2) of section 11 of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, and that till such notice had been given, the award could not be enforced as a decree of Court; and, secondly, that the arbitrator could not have proceeded ex parte without express notice given of his intention to do so. Mr. Justice

Greaves has overruled these contentions; in our opinion, there is no substance in either of them.

As regards the first point, sub section (2) of section 11 provides that the arbitrator shall cause the award to be filed in the Court and the notice of the filing shall be given to the parties by the arbitrator. This provision imposes a duty on the arbitrator, after the award has been filed, to give notice of the fact of filing to the parties: Bajinath v. Ahmed Musaji Saleji (1). Sub-section (1) of section 15 then provides that an award on a submission, on being filed in the Court in accordance with the foregoing provisions, shall (unless the Court remits it to the re-consideration of the arbitrators or umpire or sets it aside) be enforceable as if it were a decree of the Court. The appellant has argued that an award which has been filed in Court, but the filing of which has not been notified to the parties, is not enforceable as if it were a decree of the Court. We cannot accept this contention, because we are invited, in substance, to read into sub section (1) of section 15 the words "and its filing notified to the parties" after the words "filed in the Court." In our opinion, sub section (2) of section 11, read with sub section (1) of section 15, shows that the moment an award has been filed in the Court by the arbitrator, it becomes enforceable as if it were a decree of the Court, even before the arbitrator has notified to the parties the fact of its filing under section 11 (2). Consequently, it is not necessary, before the award is enforced, to show that notice of the fact of filing has been given by the arbitrator to the parties concerned. The provisions of the Indian Arbitration Act in this respect are substantially different from the provisions of the English Arbitration Act, 1889, and we see no reason why we should not give effect to the plain language of section 15. We may observe that section 11 contemplates notices by the arbitrator to the parties at two stages, namely, first, notice of making and signing the award, and secondly, notice of the filing of the award in Court. In the present case, we are concerned only with the effect of an alleged omission to give the second notice; such omission, as we have seen, does not destroy the operative character of the filed award. The first contention of the appellant accordingly fails.

(1) 18 Ind. Cas. 978; 40 C. 219; 17 C. W. N. 395.

UDAICHAND PANNA LALL v. DEBIRUX JEWANRAM.

As regards the second point, reliance has been placed by the appellant upon the decision in Gladwin v. Ohlcote (2). That case is an authority for the proposition that in general the arbitrator is not justified in proceeding ex parte without giving the party absenting himself due notice. It is advisable to give the notice in writing to each of the parties or their Solicitors, and the notice should express the arbitrator's intention clearly, otherwise the award may be set aside: Waller v. King (3), Wood v. Leake (4) and Hall v. Anderson (5). There is no statutory rule, however, that if an arbitrator proceeds ex parte without giving notice of his intention to proceed in that manner, the award made by him must be set aside. In the absence of such an inflexible statutory provision, the procedure recommended in Gladwin v. Ohlcote (2) and the other cases mentioned can be regarded only as a rule of prudence and convenience. As Lord Denman, C. J., put it in Scott v. Van Sandau (6), the law is that, if either party, after the arbitrator has given him sufficient notice and proper opportunities of attending, will not appear, the arbitrator may proceed in his absence. There is obvious good sense in the view that notice that the arbitrator will proceed with the reference on a certain day is notice that he will then proceed ex parte if one of the parties absents himself without sufficient reason. But, let us assume that when an award has been made ex parte, the absent party may prima facie be deemed to have been prejudicially affected thereby; surely, it is open to his adversary to rebut that presumption. If, for instance, it is made fairly clear that notwithstanding the service of notice upon him, that in his absence the arbitration would proceed ex parte he would not have entered appearance, it cannot reasonably be urged that the omission to serve such notice has invalidated the award. The appellant has contended that it is not open to the Court to take into account the subsequent conduct of the appellant, to determine whether, at the time of the arbitration proceedings, he had or had not made up his mind not to join in them. His argument, in substance, is that this could not have affected the judgment of the arbitrator, that we must limit ourselves to the facts and circumstances known to the arbitrator when he proceeded ex parte, and hold that his omission to intimate to the absent party that the arbitration would proceed ex parte is by itself sufficient to invalidate the award. We are clearly of opinion that this is not the proper test to be applied to determine the validity of the award in a case of this description. The true test is, has the complainant, who takes exception to the validity of the award, been in fact prejudiced by the omission of the arbitrator to serve the special notice on him. If it is established that, notwithstanding such warning, he would not have appeared before the arbitrator, he has really no grievance and cannot invite the Court to set aside the award on account of the alleged defect in procedure.

In this case, the conduct of the appellant reasonably leads to the conclusion that he was determined not to join in the arbitration proceedings. We have the fact that, notwithstanding the invitation of the respondent, he refused to appoint an arbitrator. This could hardly be attributed to abundant confidence in the gentleman selected by his opponent. But his subsequent conduct unmistakeably shows his true attitude. He disputed the competence of the arbitrator to act in that capacity on the allegation that he was not a European but an Asiatic. He submitted his case to the arbitrator, only the day before that fixed for the hearing and took no further steps. Finally, he has taken no steps to contradict the allegation contained in an affidavit filed on behalf of his adversary, where it is asserted in the plainest possible terms that he never intended to join in the arbitration. In these circumstances, we must hold that he has not been prejudiced by the omission of the arbitrator to notify that the proceedings would be held ex parte, and, that

Where a plaintiff sues for a declaration for himself and other inhabitants of a village of their right to take their cattle to a certain grazing ground through the jungle of another village, he is not entitled to the declaration, unless the leave of the Court has been obtained and a proclamation issued, as required by Order I, rule 8 of the Civil Procedure Code [p. 990, col. 2.]

A right to drive cattle promiscuously across the lands of another is not an easement capable of being acquired, no matter for what length of time the right may have been enjoyed. [p. 991, col. 1.]

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru and Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellants.

Dr. S. N. Sen and Mr. P. D. Tandon, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT:—This is a second appeal by the defendants in the suit which was dismissed by the learned Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore, but has been decreed by the District Judge on appeal. The plaintiffs claim a declaration that they, along with other

"inhabitants of village Keotra," have a right to take their cattle to a certain grazing ground through the "jungle of village Chapar Ghata." The defendants are the Zamindars of Chapar Ghata. The first Court, besides recording the evidence, appointed a Commissioner to examine the locality and relied upon the report of the said Commissioner, to the effect that he could find no defined track used by cattle across the defendants' jungle in the direction indicated by the plaintiffs. The lower Appellate Court, as we understand it, has found that the plaintiffs have acquired a right of easement to drive their cattle in any fashion they please, i.e., straggling generally across the waste lands, through the jungle of Chapar Ghata from south to north in order to reach their own grazing land on the other side of a certain stream. In second appeal two main points are taken, and both of them are, in our opinion, valid. It has been pointed out, in the first instance, that the plaintiffs have been given a declaration for the benefit of themselves and the other inhabitants of village Keotra, but that the leave of the Court had not been obtained and no proclamation had been issued as required by Order I, rule 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There is no valid answer to this objection, and the decree, as it stands, could in no case be maintained. The question has been argued before us whether a decree in favour of the individual plaintiffs should, nevertheless, be allowed to stand. The question is, whether the right which the learned District Judge has found to exist in favour of the plaintiffs is a right of easement, capable of being acquired, or whether the evidence on the record is evidence sufficient to establish the existence of a right of way in a form other than that in which it has been decreed by the lower Appellate Court. On the first point there seems no room for doubt. The learned District Judge himself felt that there was a difficulty about this aspect of the case. He concludes his judgment by saying that it is open to the defendants to prevent the plaintiffs' cattle from wandering wild in their jungle and grazing it, by making a definite route or cutting through the jungle for the plaintiffs' cattle. It seems to us extraordinary and altogether inadmissible to throw a burden of this sort upon the defendants, (the owners of the alleged servient heritage). Our attention has been drawn to an old case of the Calcutta

JAI PRASAD v. DALSINGAR.

High Court which seems exactly in point, the case of Joy Deorga Doesia v. Juggernath Roy (1). The learned Judges in that case had to consider almost precisely the same point which is now before us. In their judgment they say: "The Judge, however, says that the plaintiffs' cows have been for very many years driven by him over these lands and that this must be considered to have given him a right of way which cannot now be interfered with. If the having driven the cattle over the lands generally, that is to say, not by any particular path but straggling promiscuously over the lands, which is the right claimed by the plaintiff, be held to give the plaintiff a right in all time to come so to drive his cattle, it would be interfering with the lands to such an extent as to make it impossible that they should ever be used for any useful purpose. A right of way or other easement must not be so large as to extinguish or destroy all the ordinary uses of the servient property and, in our opinion, no length of time would have given the plaintiff such a right as he claims, namely, a straggling right to the promiscuous use of the whole property for the purpose of driving his cattle over it."

That is, in our opinion a correct statement of the law and we cannot improve upon the manner in which it has been there expressed. Yet this is obviously the right which the lower Appellate Court has found to exist in favour of the present plaintiffs. The learned District Judge says, in so many words, that it cannot be supposed that the cattle of the plaintiffs would travel by any circumscribed and definite route through the jungle. So far from rejecting the report of the Commissioner on the questions of fact observed by him, he seems to accept and endorse it. For this reason also, the decree as passed in favour of the plaintiffs cannot be maintained. What we have been asked to do on behalf of the plaintiffs has been to send down an issue as to whether or not, as a matter of fact, the plaintiffs had acquired by prescription a right of easement in the form of a right of way over a circumscribed and definite path through the defendants' jungle. We have considered this argument carefully, but in our opinion, no such assertion is specifically made in the plaint and the finding of the lower Appellate Court is actually against it. We must, therefore, decline to accede to this request. The result is, that the appeal prevails. We set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance with costs throughout, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 84, 177—Appeal to District Judge against decision of Assistant Collector—Remand by District Judge—Appeal to High Court, whether lies.

There is no appeal to the High Court, from an order of remand passed by a District Judge in an appeal under the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act from the Court of an Assistant Collector.

First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Allahabad, dated the 20th of March 1920.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellant.

Mr. Lakshmi Narain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection is taken to the hearing of this appeal on the ground that no appeal lies. Ever since the case of Vilayat Hussin v. Maharaja Mahendra Ohandra Nandy (1) it has been regarded as settled law that no appeal is provided to this Court from an order of remand passed by a District Judge in an appeal preferred to his Court under the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901) from the Court of an Assistant Collector. The learned Counsel for the appellant has endeavoured to distinguish this case on the ground that the suit for arrears of rent in the Assistant Collector's Court was brought in this instance by the plaintiff in virtue of the special provisions of section 34 of the said Act. We do not think that this makes any difference. We hold that no appeal lies and we dismiss this appeal accordingly with costs.

Custom—Pre-emption—Wajib-ul-arz, entry in, construction of—Karabatmand karibi, who is.

Where a wajib-ul-arz gives the right of pre-emption to a karabatmand karibi, a person, who is eleven degrees removed from the vendor, cannot pre-empt, inasmuch as he does not fall within the category of karabatmand karibi.

First appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Ghazipur, dated the 13th January 1920.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Appellants.
Mr. Iqbal Ahmat, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Appeals Nos 25 and 26 of 1920 arise out of two suits for pre-emption. The point in the two appeals for our decision is the same. The plaintiff claimed a right to pre-empt on the basis of a custom. The defendants-vendees pleaded inter alia that, assuming that there was a custom of pre-emption, the plaintiff had no preferential right over them to take the property. The Court of first instance held in favour of the defendants-vendees and dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court on the plaintiff's appeal reversed the finding of the first Court on this one issue and remanded the case for decision on its merits. Hence the present appeal.

The wajib-ul-arz on which the plaintiff relies divides up the co-sharers of the village into three categories. The first is, near relations of the vendor in the same patti. Secondly, near relations of the vendor in another patti. Thirdly, co-sharers of the mahal. It is an admitted fact that the vendore, vendees and the pre-emptor are all co-sharers in the same patti and they are also all relations. Accepting the plaintiff's pedigree, the plaintiff is at least eleven degrees removed from the vendore. The vendees are slightly more distant. The custom as set out in the wajib-ul-arz does not give to one relation preferential right over another relation by reason of his being more closely related. The plaintiff must show that he falls within the words karabatmand karibi before he can pre-empt as against the defendants. It has more than once been held in this Court that the words karabatmand karibi do not include a relation who is so distant as the plaintiff, namely, eleven degrees removed. We can see no reason to go behind the decisions of this Court. We think the relationship between the plaintiff and the vendors is far too distant to enable the Court to hold that the plaintiff is a karabatmand karibi. The plaintiff, therefore, does not fall within the first two categories, he must of necessity fall within the third category hissedar mahal. The defendants-vendees fall in the same category. The custom does not give the plaintiff a preferential right because he is more closely related. The decision of the Court below is clearly wrong and the decision of the Court of first instance was clearly right. We allow the appeal, and set aside the order of the Court below. The plaintiff's suit will stand dismissed with costs in all Courts.

Criminal appeal from an order of acquittal passed by the Acting Sessions Judge, Surat, reversing the conviction and sentence passed by the First Class Magistrate, Surat.

for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The accused was charged before the First Class Magistrate of Surat City with having cheated one Nagin Dalabham with Rs. 5,000, an offense punishable under section 420, Indian Penal Code. The Magistrate found the accused guilty and sentenced him to suffer rigorous imprisonment for two years and pay a fine of Rs. 1,000, or in default to suffer rigorous imprisonment for six months more. On appeal, that conviction was set aside by the Acting Sessions Judge. From that order of acquittal the Government of Bombay have appealed. There is no dispute about the facts of the case. The accused, a young man of twenty two years old, a resident of Gandevi in the Baroda Territory, came down to Surat and opened a business on the 1st of February 1919, in his own name in partnership with one Harkisondas Motiram. After the 1st of February the accused entered into certain transactions. He contracted to buy a certain quantity of sesamum from one Vijubhai Hargovan of the value of over Rs. 5,000. He entered into a contract with one Aslaji for the purchase of empty kerosine oil tins of the value of Rs. 1,100. He entered into a contract to purchase twenty-five shares of the Finlay Mills for which the broker wanted Rs. 1,500 as margin money. He also entered into a contract for some cotton business with one Govindji Girdharlal. It does not appear that the accused had any money whatever to finance these transactions. After the middle of February, it seems that he went to Bombay and had an interview with one Parbhudas, who carried on business as a commission agent, with a view to enter into business transactions with him. What the result of that interview was is not quite clear. But we have letters written by the accused to Parbhudas about business. The answers sent by Parbhudas before the 28th February have not been kept by the accused, and there are no press copies, but from the letters written by the accused it is impossible to suppose that any definite arrangements for entering into business were made. Then, on the 27th February 1919, the accused wrote to Parbhudas:

"Tomorrow we will draw from here on you a hundi up to rupees ten thousand. Please take note of the same. Likewise, we shall send under cover to you avej also to the extent of rupees five thousand. Please take note of the same. And in two or three days we shall send under cover the other avej. Please take note of the same. Therefore, when the hundis come to you, please make it convenient to accept and pay for them immediately. Further, you were requested to write quoting the rates of kerosine oil, empty tins, safety matches, wax and other articles but there is no reply from you. Please, therefore, write forthwith. As far as practicable we are going to come to you personally on Monday. So that should we not send under cover other hundi then we shall come with cash. Please take note of the same."

Therefore, in that letter the accused was asking Parbhudas to honour his hundi on the promise that he would be supplied with funds to meet the hundis when presented. There is no evidence, and I cannot say that there is the slightest reason to suppose, that on the 27th February Parbhudas had made any representations to the accused that he would honour the hundis drawn by the accused without first being placed in funds.

On the 28th February Parbhudas replied to that letter saying:

EMPEROR V. UTTAMLAL NAROTTAMDAS.

"Your letter was received. Further you wrote (asking me) to write about the particulars as to the drawing of a hundi. The same was noted. We (or I) shall do the work of (accepting) hundi according to "avej" (the moneys deposited). Further you wrote about sending empty tins for being sold here. But we (or I) have got no such facilities. Therefore, if we (or I) got such facilities we (or I) shall write to you (accordingly)."

But before that letter was received by the accused he went to the complainant and asked him to negotiate a hundi for Rs. 5,000 drawn on Parbhudas. The complainant appears to have made certain enquiries which could not have been very minute. But evidently he was satisfied with the assurances of the accused, who went together with his Munim Gulabchand, that it was perfectly safe to negotiate the hundi. Accordingly, the accused was paid Rs. 5,000 by the complainant on a hundi drawn by the accused on Parbhudas. The hundi was sent the same day to Bombay but Parbhudas, having with him no funds belonging to the accused, was not prepared to give credit and honour this hundi. Parbhudas said:

"Hundi Exhibit No. M/2 was shown to me on Maha Vad 14th, Saturday (1st March 1919). It was not honoured and cashed by our firm because there was no balance available in our accounts on behalf of the drawer Uttamlal Narottamdas. I know him because he had once come to me about seven or ten days before Exhibit No. M/2 was presented and asked me if our firm would keep an account in his name and I replied that our firm would do business on his behalf so long as there was any balance available in his favour at our firm. Before the date of hundi, which is 28th February, the accused had no account with us."

What happened to the Rs. 5,000 which the accused obtained from the complainant appears from the evidence of Narottamdas, the father of the accused:

"I was at Gandevi when M/2 was written. The accused met me at Bilimora Station on the 28th February 1919 accidentally, as I had gone to ask the Station Master of Bilimora, if he can give trucks for despatching bricks to Bombay. The accused had travelled on that date from Surat and got down at Bilimora. I asked him on the station what brought him to Bilimora. He said that he had drawn a hundi of Rs. 5,000 upon Parbhudas Vanarshi and gave it to the firm of Khushal Keshavji of Surat, in which the complainant is a Munim, and that Gulabchand Kastureband had got it cashed at Khushal's firm and that he got Rs. 5,000. He said that he paid out of Rs. 5,000, Rs. 1,500 to Harkishandas to be paid to the merchants of Surat from whom he had purchased cloth, empty tins, sesamum, etc., that he had got Rs. 3,500 with him. He also said that he had bought sesamum for a Braach man named Brijmohan Keshavlal Bhagat from Vijubhai Hargovandas but no money or hundi was received from him on account of the purchase. I advised him to sell off the sesamum, and the accused sold it to one Alibhai within two or three days. As the accused had Rs. 3,500 in cash, I advised the accused to send Rs. 3,000 out of it to Parbhudas Vanarshi as the accused had opened dealings with him for the first time. He gave me Rs. 3,000 for remitting the money by a hundi."

Therefore, it was the accused's father who, evidently seeing that his son was getting into difficulties, got Rs. 3,000 from him and sent it down to Parbhudas to provide some credit in an account between Parbhudas and the accused.

Then the accused went to Bombay, and, on the 3rd of March, he paid a visit to Parbhudas. Meanwhile, on the 1st of March, Parbhudas having received Rs. 3,000 from the father of the accused had opened a credit in the name of the accused in his books. On the 3rd of March the accused withdrew Rs. 2,000 out of that Rs. 3,000. Parbhudas said:

"At the time he withdrew Rs. 2,000 I told him that Exhibit No. M/2 was not cashed, and if he paid Rs. 2,000 more, it would be cashed. He replied that his man was to come to Bombay with Rs. 10,000 and that amount would be paid to me on the next day morning and that he should be paid Rs. 2,000 as he wanted the sum badly. On the 3rd day he came to me to withdraw Rs. 1,000 and said that he himself had paid the amount of Exhibit No. M/2 and that I should pay to him the balance of Rs. 1,000. He took Rs. 1,000 and I took his signature in the receipt book."

EMPEROR V. UTTAMLAL NAROTTAMDAS.

That Rs. 3,000 was not returned to the complainant who remained out of pocket to the extent of Rs. 5,000. The complainant began to get anxious about his money. The hundi was returned protested on the 8th of March. On the 11th he made a complaint. A search was made for the accused at his firm in Surat. The accused had absconded and could not be found. He was arrested on the 1st of September in Bombay. The question is, whether the accused fraudulently or dishonestly induced the complainant by deceiving him to deliver to him Rs. 5,000. That question depends upon whether we could come to the conclusion that on the 28th February when he drew the hundi on Parbhudas he had a genuine expectation that the hundi would be honoured. We must rule out of consideration, I think, any suggestion that Parbhudas had said or written anything to the accused which could possibly have made him think that he, Parbhudas, would honour the hundi of the accused, if he had not been previously provided with money to pay the hundi; in other words, there is nothing to show that Parbhudas had ever consented to give credit to the accused, or ever said or written to him anything which might induce him to believe that he, Parbhudas, would give him credit. The result must be that the accused drew a hundi on a firm which he must have known perfectly well would not pay the hundi. The hundi was payable at sight, so that it was not a case of a hundi drawn on a firm in which the drawer had no funds at the time, but made payable after some days so that the drawer might urge that he had a legitimate expectation of putting the drawee in funds before the due date. The accused was speculating in various ways. He had contracted to purchase sesamum which he had no means to pay for. He had bought shares which he had no money to pay for. He bought kerosine oil tins when he had no means to pay for them, and likewise he entered into cotton transactions without any money. If he had been able to obtain credit, then he might have been put in funds to take up those contracts, and if they had resulted in profits he might have been able to re-pay what he had borrowed. But this is not a case of an accused person getting credit from the drawee. He got credit from the complainant on the representation that the hundi would be honoured.

It has been pressed upon us very urgently that the accused was merely speculating on the chances of the market; that he had a reasonable expectation that the market would go in his favour, and that he would be able to re-pay what he had borrowed. In order to see whether the mental attitude of the accused was so innocent, as it was represented to us by his Counsel, we are entitled to look at the conduct of the accused after the hundi had been dishonoured. We may take it, first of all, that he knew perfectly well that, unless some miracle happened, Parbhudas would not honour that hundi. If he had been able to raise from some other persons Rs. 5,000 to put Parbhudas in funds for the hundi before it had been actually protested, no doubt, so far as the complainant was concerned, he would have been saved from a criminal charge. But he made no attempt to save the complainant from even part of the loss which he was incurring. I have no doubt that the father of the accused induced him to give him Rs. 3,000 to send to Bombay, as the father must have seen in what jeopardy the accused was placing himself; and if the Rs. 3,000 which he had sent to Parbhudas had been kept there, and restored to the complainant in part-payment of his loss, the aspect of the case would have been a different one. But as soon as the accused got away from the influence of his father, he goes to Bombay and takes away the Rs. 3,000 from Parbhudas where it might have remained at any rate as part-payment against the hundi, and dissipates it in the various speculations which he had at the time. Whether he made a contract for the purchase of Finlay Mills shares before or on the 3rd of March makes very little difference. If he had made a contract on the 3rd of March and took Rs. 2,000 away from Parbhudas in order to supply the margin, which the broker demanded, then, of course, that will in no way make his case better. If he had entered into a contract before the 3rd of March, and owing to the fall in the market the broker was demanding the margin in order that the contracts might be kept open, then the result would be the same. The accused declined to act in the way which might have shown that his conduct in drawing the hundi was not so dishonest as it was on the face of it, and he might have been able to partially retrieve the mistake which he had made in drawing the hundi on an account which did not exist. In my opinion, the evidence is convincingly clear to show that the accused committed the offence of cheating: and it seems to me that the learned Sessions Judge has erred in thinking that, because the accused had entered into contracts, for which money was required, he could have no guilty intention when he got Rs. 5,000 out of the complainant. There is no harm in getting credit from a person if all the necessary parts of the case are disclosed. If these are placed before the person who is asked to advance money, and he chooses, on a full disclosure of all the relevant facts, to give credit, then if he loses that is his own look-out. But the mere fact that the accused had entered into contracts before the 28th February without having any means to carry out those contracts, has no bearing whatever on the question. He had no real expectation that Parbhudas would honour this hundi. He found himself in difficulties. He wanted a considerable sum of money. He knew perfectly well that Parbhudas would not honour that hundi unless he was provided with funds to meet it, or unless he had distinctly stated that he would give credit to the accused; yet with that knowledge the accused obtains Rs. 5,000 from the complainant on the strength of that hundi, which he must have known was not worth the paper it was written on. Therefore, the order of acquittal by the Sessions Judge must be set aside and the accused must be convicted of the offence of cheating under section 420, Indian Penal Code. But considering the youth of the accused we sentence him to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000 or in default to suffer rigorous imprisonment for six months more under section 420, Indian Penal Code. The fine, if not paid, shall be recovered under section 536, Criminal Procedure Code. The fine, if recovered, shall be paid to the complainant as compensation under section 545, Criminal Pro.

cedure Code. Any part of the one year's sentence which has been suffered by the accused from the 5th January 1920 will be taken into account.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1899), ss. 179, 181 (2):—Jurisdiction of Criminal Court—Misappropriation by servant—Money collected in one district—Shop in another district—Servant, duty of, to account at shop.

M. owned a cloth shop at Mirzapur. S was employed as a servant of the shop and his duty was to collect money due to his master and deposit it in the shop at Mirzapur: he was sent to two villages in the Allahabad District to collect money, which he did collect, but misappropriated. M instituted criminal proceedings against S. at Mirzapur, and the question was whether the Courts at Mirzapur had jurisdiction to entertain the complaint:

Held, that as S. had to account to his master at Mirzapur, the Courts there had jurisdiction. [p. 997, col. 2.]

Mr. B. K. Mukerji, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision at the instance of Sheo Shankar. His case is that he has been brought before the Magistrate of Mirzapur District, who has commenced to try a criminal charge against him, without having any jurisdiction so to do. Sheo Shankar says that the jurisdiction should be Allahabad and not Mirzapur.

Now, the question of jurisdiction must be decided at the outset by a perusal of the complaint. It is on the terms of the com.

plaint that the Magistrate first has to inform himself as to the nature of the case, and see whether, from the allegations made in the complaint, it would appear that he had jurisdiction to entertain it. For sometime we have had our attention drawn to the authorities on one or the other side of the line and there is no doubt that, during part of the hearing, we were under the impression that this case raised in a convenient form all the facts necessary for a definite decision on section 179 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Our inclination was expressed to be to uphold the decision in George Langridge v. George Atkins (1). But a translation of the complaint which was laid before us towards the close of the case has made it perfectly clear that this is a simple matter. The complainant alleges that Sheo Shankar was a servant of a cloth shop situated in Mirzapur, and as such servant it was his duty to realise the price of cloth from traders according to the directions given by the master of the shop and to deposit the money thus realised in the shop at Mirzapur. The complainant then goes on to allege that on the 27th of December 1919 the servant was sent in the course of his duties to two villages to collect money and that he did collect some Rs. 1,500; that those two villages were in the District of Allahabad, and that the collections were made on account of the money due to the petitioner's master. Then, paragraph 6 sets out that, instead of depositing the aforesaid sums at the shop of the petitioner's master the accused No. 1, at the instigation of, and in consultation with the accused No. 2, who is his brother-in-law, and in order to conceal his criminal breach of trust, the accused No. 1 made a report at the Police station at Manda, in the Allahabad District, that a dacoity had taken place. On the investigation made by Manda Police and the Police Inspector of the Allahabad District, the said report was found to be absolutely false and groundless and to have been made in collusion with the accused No. 2. Subsequently, the complaint asked that both the accused may be punished under sections 408, 114 of the Indian Penal Code. It should be stated that the residence of accused No. 2 (the brother-in-law of the applicant here) is stated to be in the Mirzapur District. Therefore, when the Magistrate perused this document he was, we think, entitled to assume that the matter was within his jurisdiction. According to the complaint, the plan to misappropriate this money was conceived in Mirzapur and the subsequent journey to Manda was undertaken only to give colour to what was said to be a false story. Accused No. 1 was the servant of the complainant and had a duty to account to his master at the shop at Mirzapur. In the circumstances, the case does not present any feature of importance or make it necessary for us to consider which of the various decisions on section 179 of the Code of Criminal Procedure we prefer. But we do take the opportunity of saying that at one moment this case did appear to us to be indistinguishable from the case of George Langridge v. George Atkins (1). The application, therefore, must be rejected and the record will be returned for the trial of the case on the merits.

Under the provisions of section XV of the Schedule to the Upper Burma Criminal Justice Regulation, the Judicial Commissioner will not interfere with an order of a District Magistrate, even where the procedure is irregular, unless that procedure has occasioned a failure of justice. [p. 998, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The Police reported petitioner to the Sub Divisional Magistrate, Amarapura, for action under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure

(1) 17 Ind. Cas. 792; 15 A. 29; 10 A. L. J. 11; 13 Cr. L. J. 856.

TILAK RAI v. EMPEROR.

On that report the Magistrate decided to take action against petitioner under section 110 instead of section 107 of the Code, and after taking evidence directed petitioner to enter into a bond in Rs. 200 with two sureties to be of good behaviour for one year.

Petitioner appealed to the District Magistrate, who set aside the order for security for good behaviour, and directed the Magistrate to make further enquiry against petitioner under section 107 of the Code.

The Magistrate, instead of taking proceedings against petitioner under section 107, noted in the diary of the record of the proceedings under section 110 that he had been referred to a ruling which debarred the District Magistrate from ordering further enquiry in proceedings under section 110 of the Code, and gave petitioner time to apply to this Court for revision of the District Magistrate's order.

I have heard petitioner and referred to the case mentioned by the Magistrate, namely the case of Dayanath Taluqdar v. Emperor (1), and I find that what the learned Judges said in that case was: "It appears to us that the District Magistrate had no power under the law to order further enquiry in the terms in which he did." In that case an order for security for good behaviour had been made against the petitioner, and on appeal the District Magistrate set aside that order and directed that there should be a further enquiry, and, at the same time, required increased security from the petitioners.

It seems to me clear that in an appeal under section 406 the District Magistrate has power under section 423 (c) and (d) of the Code to alter or reverse the order under appeal and to make any consequential or incidental order that may be just and proper.

If the District Magistrate considered that the order for security for good behaviour was not warranted by the evidence or the circumstances of the case but was of opinion that the case was one in which an order for security to keep the peace might be justified, I see no reason to believe that he was not competent to set aside the order for security for good behaviour and at the same time to order proceedings to be taken under section 107. That procedure would be analogous to that prescribed in section 423 (b), which empowers an Appellate Court in an appeal from a conviction to reverse the finding and sentence and to order the accused to be re-tried, and would not, in my opinion, be open to any objection.

Further, apart from the provisions of section 423, the District Magistrate had power to initiate proceedings against petitioner under section 107 of the Code, and in view of the provisions of section XV of the Schedule to the Upper Burma Criminal Justice Regulations, which says that no order shall be reversed or altered on appeal or revision on account of any irregularity of procedure unless the irregularity has occasioned a failure of justice, I should not interfere, even if I thought that the District Magistrate's procedure was irregular, since I fail to see that that procedure has occasioned any failure of justice.

I, therefore, see no reason to interfere and I dismiss the application.

Under sub-section (3) of section 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code, an Appellate Court has power to make an order for security, even though the original Trial Court, from whose decision the appeal was heard, had no such power under sub-section (1) of that section.

Mr. J. M. Banerji, for the Applicants.

Mr. E. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

DARBARI CHOUDHURY v. EMPEROR.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order of an Appellate Court directing the applicants to furnish security to keep the peace under section 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The applicants were convicted by a Magistrate of the Second Class of the offence punishable under section 352 of the Indian Penal Code and each of them was sentenced to a fine of Rs. 10. They appealed. The Appellate Court dismissed their appeals, but held that, as there was a long standing feud between the complainant and the accused, it was desirable to order the accused to furnish security under section 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is contended on behalf of the applicants that, as the Court of first instance which had the powers of a Second Class Magistrate only was not competent to order security to be furnished under section 106, the Appellate Court was also incompetent to make such an order and it is urged that the Appellate Court could only exercise such powers as the Court of first instance could have done and as in the present instance the Court of first instance could not have ordered security to be furnished under section 106 the Appellate Court could not have made an order under that section. It is further contended that the case was not one in which an order under section 106 ought to have been made. As regards the first point, the matter is concluded by the decision of this Court in Dharam Das v. Emperor (1). That was a decision of a Division Bench of two Judges and I am bound to follow it. There are, no doubt, decisions of the Calcutta and Madras High Courts to the contrary, but the learned Judges who decided the case referred to above did not agree with the rulings of the Calcutta and the Madras Courts and agreed with a decision of the Bombay High Court to which they referred in their judgment. It seems to me that sub-section (3) of section 106 is wide enough to include an Appellate Court whatever may have been the powers of the original Trial Court from whose decision the appeal was heard. Sub-section (1) specifies the different descriptions of Courts which could make an order under the section and sub-section (3) adds another class of Courts to the Courts mentioned in sub-section (1), namely, Appellate Courts. Had the object of the Legislature been to limit the powers of the Appellate Court one would expect to find in that sub-section a limitation of the powers of the Appellate Court, such as we find in section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in the case of enhancement of a sentence passed by a Magistrate of the first class. However, as there is a decision of two Judges of this Court on the subject which is against the applicants I feel myself bound by that decision and I see no reason to differ from it. As regards the second point raised, it appears that there has been enmity between the parties for some time and that the accused deliberately lay in wait to commit an assault on the complainant. In these circumstances, although the assault actually committed was not so severe as to justify a heavy sentence, the Appellate Court cannot be held to have exercised its discretion unwarrantably in directing the applicants to furnish security. For these reasons I dismiss the application.

pay a fine of Rs. 25. The facts of the case are that, during the absence of the complainant, (the owner of the goat) one Deokant Thakur, peon of the petitioner, who is a Tahsildar, went and forcibly took his goat away under the petitioner's order; and the complainant hearing this on his return went to the Zemindari Kasbari and demanded the return of his goat, but the petitioner refused to return it and had it killed.

It is contended on behalf of the petitioner that, whatever offense he may have committed, the offense could not be theft because there was no removal of the goat by him. In answer to this argument the learned Assistant Government Advocate contends that the theft by the petitioner occurred when he ordered the goat to be killed. In my opinion, this argument is not sound, because the theft had already taken place when the goat was removed from the complainant's house by Deokant, the peon. It was then suggested that, even if the petitioner could not be convicted of theft, he was guilty of abetment of theft and the failure to frame a charge under that section has not prejudiced him. The case of Admoniba Payi Kanniah v. Emperor (1) is against the contention of the learned Assistant Government Advocate.

The Rule must be made absolute, the conviction set aside and the fine if paid must be refunded.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 259, 439—Procedure—Charge framed—Complainant, absence of—Acquittal, order of, legality of—Revision—High Court, power of.

No section of the Criminal Procedure Code allows a Court to pass an order of acquittal after a charge has been framed, except upon a finding on the merits of not guilty.

Where a charge has been framed it is the duty of the Trial Court to proceed with the trial in the absence of the complainant and to convict or acquit on the merits.

The High Court has no power to convert an acquittal into a conviction, but it has power to direct the Trial Court to conclude the trial in the manner provided by law.

Petitioner under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Ambala, at Simla, dated the 28th July 1920, affirming that of the Magistrate, First Class, Ambala, dated the 12th June 1920.

Mr. N. O. Pandit, for the Petitioner.

Mr. O. L. Gulati, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The Trial Court passed a bold order of acquittal in this case, because, after the prosecution evidence had been recorded, after charge had been framed, after the bulk of the defence evidence had been recorded, an adjournment was given for the summons of one last witness for the defence.

On the date fixed, the eighth hearing in the case, the complainants and their Pleader failed to arrive in time, whereupon the Court, by reason of their absence and not on the merits, acquitted the accused. Such an order is contemplated by no section of the Code, so far as I am aware, and no section allows a Court to pass an order of acquittal after a charge has been framed, except upon a finding on the merits of not guilty.

In this case it was the duty of the Trial Court to proceed with the trial in the absence of the complainant and to convict or acquit on the merits.

This Court has no power to convert an acquittal into a conviction, but it has power to direct the Trial Court to conclude the trial in the manner provided by law.

I set aside the Magistrate's order of acquittal and direct him to proceed to judgment after taking the evidence of the remaining witness for the defence.

Upper Burma Criminal Justice Regulation, Sch., sec. XII—Revision—District Magistrate, power of.

Under the provisions of section XII of the Schedule to the Upper Burma Criminal Justice Regulation, a District Magistrate has extensive powers of revision allowing him to deal with the cases of Second and Third Class Magistrates as he thinks fit instead of reporting them to the High Court.

Mr. N. M. Mukerjee, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT:—Petitioners were sent up by the Police for trial under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code in respect of serious injuries received by one Po Ka during a fracas which resulted from gambling at Puzanetkin village in the Myingyan District.

The Magistrate discharged the petitioners, but noted at the end of his judgment that many of the witnesses mentioned by Po Ka in his deposition, which was recorded in hospital when it was thought that he was likely to die, had not been examined.

The District Magistrate, having called for the case in revision, said that there appeared from the proceedings and the Police papers to be grounds for further enquiry and ordered that enquiry to be held by the Senior Magistrate.

Petitioners ask me to set aside that order in revision and I have read the records and heard their learned Advocate.

One of the grounds argued is that a District Magistrate in Upper Burma has no power to revise the orders of First Class Magistrates. In view of the express provisions of sections 435 to 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, this argument would not be worth notice, but, for the fact that it is constantly cropping up in cases in this Court. It is, of course, based on the provisions of section XII of the Schedule to the Upper Burma Criminal Justice Regulation which says that a District Magistrate in revising the order of a Second or Third Class Magistrate, may, subject to certain limitations, "pass such order as he thinks fit." That provision obviously does not limit the District Magistrate's ordinary powers in revision under the Code but, on the contrary, extends his powers under section 438 by allowing him to deal with the cases of Second and Third Class Magistrates as he thinks fit, instead of reporting them to this Court for orders.

So far as the merits of the present case are concerned, it is perfectly clear from the Magistrate's own note that there was scope for further enquiry, and I see no reason to interfere with the District Magistrate's discretion in the matter.

The application is dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439—(5)—Revision—Appeal competent—Revision, whether entertainable.

Where it is open to an accused person to appeal and he does not do so, clause (5) of section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code bars the entertainment of an application for revision.

Application for revision against the order of the Judicial Commissioner, Sind.

Mr. Wadhmal Oodharam, for the Applicant.

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, Public Prosecutor for Sind, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The next point raised by the learned Pleader was that the Court should revise the proceedings against his client under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

It was open to the applicant to lodge an appeal. Unfortunately for him clause (5) of section 439 runs as follows:—

KALLU v. EMPEROR.

"Where under this Code an appeal lies and no appeal is brought, no proceedings by way of revision shall be entertained at the instance of the party who could have appealed."

The learned Pleader has urged that the case is already before the Bench and the Court can, therefore, on its own motion act under section 439. It is not, however, the case that the proceedings are before the Court that it may revise the conviction. They are before the Court that the applicant may show cause why his sentence should be enhanced. The only way that we could act to his advantage under section 439 would be to admit this application in revision which the learned Pleader has tendered. But to do that would be to entertain the proceedings by way of revision at the instance of the party who has not appealed: This we are expressly forbidden to do by clause (5), section 439. A somewhat similar opinion was expressed by Fawcett, J. C., and Crump, A. J. C., in Jumo v. Emperor (1). The learned Judges observed: "It would be pure quibble to say that, in spite of the provisions of section 439 (5) of the Code, the Court could do what applicant wants of its own motion. This would be a mere evasion of the Statute which the Court cannot permit."

A further request made by the learned Pleader was that the Court should, if it finds itself unable to admit the application for revision, treat this application for revision as an appeal and give the applicant the benefit of section 5 of the Limitation Act. But the grounds given by the applicant for not filing the appeal are, that he "has undergone expenses, trouble and the anxiety of the prosecution for about 10 months, and, therefore, did not appear to file an appeal." These reasons do not appear to us to be a sufficient cause within the meaning of section 5 of the Limitation Act.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 109 OF 1920

November 17, 1920.

Present :— Mr. Justice Ryves.

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code Act V. of 1898, s. 110—General repute, evidence of, whether sufficient to justify taking security.

Where in a case under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code the prosecution witnesses testify merely to the reputation of the accused, and know nothing about him beyond that reputation, and are entirely ignorant of the circumstances of, or of the business carried on by, the accused, an order requiring him to furnish security is not justified. [p 10, 3, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from an order of the District Magistrate, Agra, dated the 24th July 1920.

Mr. Kaila Nath Mukerji, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Kallu has been ordered to be bound down under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The notice issued against him under section 112 of the Criminal Procedure Code states that he is a thief by profession and habitually commits extortion. A large number of witnesses for the prosecution were produced and they generally say that Kallu has the reputation of being a harbourer of thieves and commits extortion. They go on to say that he has no other means of livelihood, and in cross-examination, most of them said that he had no cultivation or business. The learned Magistrate has accepted this evidence and on the strength of this evidence has passed the order under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which was confirmed in appeal, but it is quite evident from the learned District Magistrate's order that the evidence against Kallu is extremely slight; indeed, he says so himself. The accused, who is a man of sixty years, had apparently never been suspected by the Police until early in this year when a dacoity was committed at the house of one Gobardhan Jat. He was suspected, not of having taken part in the dacoity, but of helping one of the accused, a relation of his, in the dacoity to evade arrest.

KRISHNASAMI NAIDU, In re T. G.

It was only after that that a history sheet was opened for him. The District Magistrate admits that there was no evidence of his having been suspected in any definite case either before or after history sheet was opened, and that the case can only succeed if the evidence of general repute can be believed. It is, of course, very easy for witnesses to say that so and so is by repute a bad character. All these witnesses, seventeen in number, who were produced for the prosecution, were tested as to their real knowledge of Kallu's circumstances and they said that they knew nothing about the accused personally beyond his reputation. The District Magistrate has found, as did the trying Magistrate, that the witnesses for the defence are to be believed when they say that the accused has some cultivation, has a bullock and a camel, does a little money-lending and a little grain-dealing business. All the prosecution witnesses, although they are quite aware that this man has such an evil reputation, are entirely ignorant of the business carried on by him which, however, must be patent to the people of the locality. A man cannot have grain-dealing, and cultivation and use oxen and camels without it being apparent to his neighbours, I am, therefore, not at all satisfied with the evidence for the prosecution. I note, however, that the District Magistrate, having held that the accused carries on cultivation and business in a small way, goes on to say that his position in life makes it so highly probable that he is an associate of thieves and dacoits; that he apparently for this reason feels justified in supporting the order of the Magistrate. It would be a dangerously broad rule to lay down that a small shop keeper must, therefore, be an associate of dacoits and that it is necessary, therefore, to bind him down.

In my opinion, this is not a case, on the Magistrate's own showing, for an order under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

I set aside the conviction and order that security bonds be discharged

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No 54 OF 1920.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 44 OF 1920.

April 27, 1920.

Present:—Justice Sir Abdur Rahim, Kt., and Justice Sir William Ayling, Kt.,

In re T. G. KRISHNASAMI NAIDU

AND OTHERS—ACCUSED—PETITIONERS.

Madras District Municipalities Act IV of 1884, ss. 4, 280—Chairman, delegation of powers of, to third person—Complaint by delegate, legality of.

Where the Chairman of a Municipal Council lawfully authorises a person under section 2 of the Madras District Municipalities Act to exercise his powers, including the power to lodge a complaint, that person is entitled to exercise that power so long as the authorisation lasts, and he does not need express authorisation under section 280 to institute a complaint in respect of an offence under the Act.

Petitioners, under sections 455 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the First Class Magistrate, Tiruppathur Division, in Criminal Appeal No. 14 of 1920, preferred against the judgment of the Sub-Magistrate of Tiruppathur in Calender Case No. 55 of 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. B. O. Sankaranarayana, for the Petitioners.—The Chairman delegate was not competent to lodge this complaint. The general authority to him by the Chairman to perform the latter's functions under section 32 (4) of the District Municipalities Act will not cover cases under section 280. There must be express authorisation under section 280.

The expression "Chairman" in section 280 does not include a Chairman delegate.

Mr. O. Narasimhachariar, for the Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.—The authorisation under section 32 (4) extends to the institution of complaints under section 280. The object of the section is to relieve the Chairman and it would be meaningless to insist on express authorization for each complaint under section 280. Exhibit D, the authority, is very wide, the only things excepted being the signing of cheques and incurring expenditure in anticipation of the Council's sanction. See Kaliaperumal Naidu v. Emperor (1). Section 280 being only aimed

ORDER.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—In this case the conviction is attacked on the ground, that the complaint in respect of the offence which consisted in a breach of the District Municipalities Act (Mad. Act IV of 1884) was not made by one of the persons referred to in section 280 of that Act. That section says: "No person shall be tried for any offence against the provisions of this Act.....except upon complaint made by the Police, or by the Municipal Council or by the Chairman, or by a person expressly authorised in this behalf by the Municipal Council, or the Chairman." Mr. V. P. Row was the Ex Officio Chairman of the Municipality of Tirupathur and he, by an order, Exhibit D, dated 30th January 1919, authorised, under section 32, sub section (4), of the Act, Mr. A. N. Ardbanari Aiyar, a Municipal Councillor, to exercise all the powers conferred, and to perform all the duties imposed, on the Chairman by the said Act, with the exception of signing cheques and incurring expenditure, in anticipation of Council's sanction. It is the Councillor, Mr. Ardbanari Aiyar, that made the complaint in respect of the offence charged against the petitioners.

It was argued that, in spite of any general delegation of power under section 32, section 280 requires that a person, other than the Chairman, or the Municipal Council or the Police, could only lodge a complaint if he is specifically authorised to do so in that particular matter, and that Mr. Ardbanari Aiyar not being a person so expressly authorised was not entitled to institute a proceeding, which led to conviction of the petitioners. The argument has certain plausibility about it; but the answer is really quite plain. The Chairman undoubtedly could make a complaint by the express words of section 280. That being so, the person whom the Chairman lawfully authorised under section 32 to exercise his powers, including the power to lodge a complaint, would also be entitled to exercise that power, so long as the authorisation lasts. I may mention that I was at first inclined to think that there was some substance in the objection of petitioners; but on further consideration I am persuaded that the objection is without any force. The petition is, therefore, dismissed.

AYLING, J.—The petitioners in this case were convicted of an offence under section 189, District Municipalities Act (Mad. Act IV of 1884) and their conviction confirmed on appeal. We are asked to set it aside on the sole ground that the case was not instituted as required by section 280 of the Act, which runs as follows:—

"No person shall be tried for any offence against the provisions of this Act, or of any bye-law made under section 15 except upon a complaint made by the Police, or by the Municipal Council or by the Chairman, or by a person expressly authorised in this behalf by the Municipal Council, or the Chairman."

The case was admittedly instituted not by the Chairman, but by the Chairman delegate (vide definition in section 32 (4) of the Act.) The delegation is Exhibit D. It authorises the Chairman delegate to exercise all the powers conferred and to perform all the duties imposed, on the Chairman by the District Municipalities Act, with the exception of signing cheques and incurring expenditure, in anticipation of Council's sanction. On the face of it, therefore, the delegation would seem to include the power of instituting a case on complaint under section 280.

It is, however, contended that this is not enough and that section 280 requires an express authorisation in this behalf. In my opinion, the words "by a person expressly authorised in this behalf by the Municipal Council or the Chairman," refer to an authorisation to prefer a specific complaint not to the general power of complaining. They are intended to obviate the necessity for the complaining Council or Chairman, as the case may be, of having to attend personally to make the complaint in the Magistrate's Court. This appears to be the interpretation put upon them by Sadasiva Aiyar and Odgere, JJ., in a recent case reported as Kaliaperumal Naidu v. Emperor (1). I see no ground for holding that the delegation of the power of complaining by a Chairman to a Chairman delegate need be in a particular form; or that by reason of the words in question Exhibit D, is in operative in this respect.

EMPEROR V. TUKA NANA RAMOSHI.

The other contention is that the term 'Chairman' in section 280 does not include 'Chairman delegate.'

The word 'Chairman' is not among the definitions in the Act and it is curious that, although section 32 defines 'Chairman delegate,' the latter phrase is, as far as I can see, used in no subsequent sections. In numerous sections the Chairman is invested with certain powers or charged with certain duties without any reference to a Chairman delegate. I may instance section 30 which deals with the duty of presiding at meetings. Section 42 which gives a Chairman power over the Municipal Staff. Section 102 et seq which relates to the Collection of taxes. Section 147 et seq regarding water supply, and section 183 which gives emergency power in case of dangerous buildings. Unless it be conceded that the term Chairman in those sections includes a Chairman delegate (provided the latter's order of delegation covered the matters referred to), it would seem to follow that none of these powers could be exercised by a Chairman delegate. The delegation of a Chairman's powers may last as long as three months; but even in much shorter periods a Chairman delegate's inability to exercise some of these powers might be disastrous. In fact, unless the effect of delegation be to clothe the Chairman delegate with all the powers of a Chairman, so far as the delegation order extends, the delegation is meaningless.

If the word 'Chairman,' in the section I have referred to, includes a Chairman delegate, I fail to see why it should not be so in section 280. The object of that section is simply to prevent prosecutions for offences under the Act being instituted by private persons and I see no reason why the Legislature should have intended that in this special particular a Chairman delegate should be placed in the position of importance.

Section 32 (4) empowers the Chairman, with the previous permission of the Council, to delegate to a Councillor any of his powers or duties and it appears to me that the effect of delegation is to place a Chairman delegate, so far as the delegated powers extend, in precisely the same position as a Chairman subject to the three provisos contained in the clause, none of which affects the present cause. It seems to me that the term 'Chairman' in section 280 includes 'Chairman delegate' (if the delegation under section 32 is wide enough), and that the present prosecution was properly instituted.

Criminal Tribes Act (III of 1911), s. 23—Second and third convictions, what are.

The second conviction contemplated by clause (a) of sub-section (1) of section 23 of the Criminal Tribes Act need not be the second conviction after the Act, nor is it necessary that it should be the second in fact. Taking the conviction or convictions prior to the Act as one group constituting one conviction, the first one after the Act would be the second conviction for the purpose of the section though, in point of fact, it may be one more in a series of convictions prior to the Act. Similarly, a third conviction within the meaning of clause (b) of the same sub-section must be at least the second after the Act. [p. 1006, col. 1.]

Criminal reference made by the District Magistrate, Satara.

Mr. S. S. Pathar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The accused No. 2 in this case has been convicted of robbery under section 392, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to suffer rigorous imprisonment for eighteen months by the Trial Magistrate, though he is a member of a criminal tribe, and though he was once previously convicted in April 1903 and sentenced to six years' rigorous imprisonment under section 395 by the Sessions Court of Satara.

The District Magistrate has made a reference to this Court recommending that the conviction and sentence be set aside, and that the accused No. 2 be committed to the Court of Session for trial, in view of the provisions of section 23 [of] the Criminal Tribes Act (III of 1911).

DINANATH SUNDRAJI RAVTE V. EMPEROR.

We have to consider, first, whether section 23 (1), clause (a), applies to this case, and, secondly, if it applies, whether, under the circumstances, it is necessary to give effect to the District Magistrate's recommendation.

As regards the construction of section 23, which is not quite easy, I am of opinion that, though the first conviction is prior to the Act of 1911, and the present conviction is the first after the Act and second, in point of fact, it is "a second conviction" within the meaning of clause (a) of section 23, sub-section (1). The "second conviction" contemplated by that clause need not be the second conviction after the Act, nor is it necessary that it should be the second in fact. Taking the conviction or convictions prior to the Act as one group constituting one conviction, the first one after the Act would be the second conviction for the purpose of the section though, in point of fact, it may be one more in a series of convictions prior to the Act. Clause (b) of the same sub-section does not apply to the present case. But in order to be able to construe the section as a whole, we have necessarily considered it; and in my opinion a third conviction within the meaning of the clause must be at least the second after the Act.

This is the construction adopted by the Madras High Court in Sellamani, In re (1). Though this construction is not free from difficulty, on the whole I think that out of all the alternative constructions, this seems to be the least open to objection, having regard to the words of the section, as also to the scope and object of the section. I am, therefore, of opinion that the section applies to the present case.

It appears, however, that the Trial Magistrate was aware of all the material facts. In the exercise of his discretion he has decided the case instead of committing it to the Court of Session for trial, and passed a sentence within his powers. It is true that he has not referred in terms to section 23 of the Criminal Tribes Act of 1911. But that does not necessarily mean that he was not alive to the provisions of the section. Assuming, however, that he passed the sentence without advertence to these provisions, we have to consider whether it is necessary to interfere now. The section provides that the accused shall be punished in accordance with the requirements of clause (a), "in the absence of special reasons to the contrary to be mentioned in the judgment." The previous conviction in this case was in 1903; and presumably after the accused came out of jail in 1909 or earlier, he has led an honest life for over ten years. That is, in my opinion, a special reason, under the circumstances of this case, for not punishing the accused under the section.

I would, therefore, discharge the Rule.

CRUMP, J.—I agree. Whatever view I might be inclined to take were the matter res integra, I am, as it is, content to follow the decision of the Madras High Court cited by my learned brother. Section 23 (a) of the Criminal Tribes Act of 1911 is no doubt susceptible of more than one interpretation and there are perhaps more than one which are equally plausible. But in such a matter as this where one High Court has interpreted the section, I do not think that any advantage would be gained by adopting another interpretation, more specially as the interpretation which has found favour with the Madras High Court, is, on the whole, I think, reasonable. As to the particular case, I have nothing to add to the remarks of my learned brother.

As soon as an accused person, whose confession is being recorded, informs the Magistrate that he is making the confession under inducement, it becomes useless to record the confession, and such a confession, if recorded, is inadmissible in evidence and ought not to be allowed to go to the Jury. It makes no difference whether there actually was any inducement or not.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The accused was charged with the offence of murder before the Sessions Judge of Thana sitting with a Jury. There was an unanimous verdict of guilty under section 302, Indian Penal Code, and the accused was sentenced to transportation for life. In appeal it has been contended that the confession should not have been admitted in evidence and placed before the Jury, as it was not relevant under section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act. If the confession itself had been free of all defects, and then in the Sessions Court had been retracted, and the accused had made allegations that the confession had been made under inducement, then it would be a question for the Court to consider whether or not the confession was relevant; and it seems as if the learned Judge in directing the Jury had considered himself free to consider whether the confession was relevant under section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act. But on reading the confession, it appears that the accused told the Magistrate that he had been told to tell the truth by the Sahab who told him to tell the truth and he would be released. Obviously, then, the accused told the Magistrate that he was making a confession under an inducement, and it was quite useless for the Magistrate to continue further to record the confession. It does not matter whether as a matter of fact the Police Superintendent had told the accused that he would be released if he told the truth. It is rather difficult to believe that any Police Superintendent would have been so foolish as to tell the accused that. But once the accused had told the Magistrate that he was making the confession under inducement it was no use whatever continuing to record the confession. Therefore, we shall have to consider the record as if the confession had never been made. No doubt the Jury, in coming to the conclusion they did, under the direction of the Sessions Judge, took the confession into consideration and weighed it with the rest of the evidence, and it is impossible to say whether, supposing that the confession had never been placed before them, they would have convicted the accused on the rest of the evidence. It would be open for us to consider the evidence, apart from the confession, and see whether it would be sufficient to support the conviction. But in a case like this, that is, an extremely difficult course for the Court to pursue, because no doubt we have read the record and it is almost impossible for us to exclude all consideration of the confession from our minds while looking at the rest of the evidence. Undoubtedly, there is a considerable body of evidence, apart from the confession, which the Jury might or might not believe, though speaking for myself I should find it extremely difficult to be able to come to a conclusion on that evidence with regard to the guilt or innocence of the accused. I think the best course to pursue is to set aside the conviction and direct a re-trial.

SHAH, J.—I agree.

Mr. Jinnah, (with him Mr. D. W. Pilgaonkar), for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—Certain questions of law which arose in a case before the Chief Presidency Magistrate in the case of Imperator v. Keshav Govind and thirty-three others, have been referred for the opinion of the High Court, under section 432, Criminal Procedure Code. On the evidence, the Magistrate found that the accused were members of an unlawful assembly.

The question was, whether they had been commanded in the manner prescribed by law to disperse, and it is admitted that the crowd was commanded to disperse by Mr. Oliveira, the Presidency Magistrate.

Under section 127, Criminal Procedure Code, any Magistrate or officer-in-charge of a Police Station may command any unlawful assembly to disperse. But the whole of Chapter IX of the Criminal Procedure Code, in which section 127 appears, was repealed by the Bombay City Police Act IV of 1902, and sections 127 and 128, Criminal Procedure Code, were re-placed by section 40 of that Act. Section 40 sub-section (1) makes no mention of a Magistrate. The only person who may command an unlawful assembly to disperse is an officer-in-charge of a Section; and under section 55 a Police Officer of superior rank, if on the scene, might perform the duty of the officer in charge of a Section. In this case it appears the Police Commissioner was on the scene. Instead of giving the command to disperse himself, he asked the Magistrate to give the command. If the section gives no power to the Magistrate to command an unlawful assembly to disperse, since it is only when a member of an unlawful assembly has been commanded in the manner prescribed by law to disperse that he could be found guilty under section 145, Indian Penal Code, it seems clear that a member of an unlawful assembly who has been commanded by a Magistrate to disperse cannot be convicted under that section; nor does the language of section 151, Indian Penal Code, make any difference, although the word "lawfully" is used instead of "in the manner prescribed by law." The explanation shows that it was not intended that the difference in phraseology in the two sections should make any difference in the proper construction of them. I think, therefore, that the construction placed by the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate on section 40 of the Bombay City Police Act is correct. Questions 1 and 3 should be answered in the affirmative and questions 2 and 4 in the negative. We think there was not much necessity to refer these questions to the High Court, as it would have been open to the Magistrate to send the papers to Government with his decision, for it is really a matter for the Legislature to decide whether section 40 of the Bombay City Police Act should be amended so as to bring it into line with sections 127 and 128 of the Criminal Procedure Code, all that the Court can do is to lay down what the law is not what it ought to be.

Admission of opposite party, when can be relied on.

When reliance is placed upon an admission made by a witness examined by the opposite party, the whole of the admission must be taken into consideration. PAT GOBIND PRASAD V. CHATTORBHUI 482

Adverse possession—Co-owners—Possession of one co-owner, nature of.

Inasmuch as the possession of one co-owner is rightful and does not imply hostility, as would the possession of a stranger, the entry and possession of land under the common title of one co-owner does not give rise to the presumption that such possession is adverse possession to the other co-owners. Ordinarily, the possession of one co-owner is for the benefit of all co-owners. C BALARAM GURIA V. SYAMA CHARAN MONDAL, 24 C. W. N. 1057; 33 C. L. J. 344 293

Landlord and tenant—Ex-proprietary tenant, possession of, whether adverse to zemindar.

The possession of an ex-proprietary tenant can never be adverse to the zemindar, who is entitled to a declaration that he is the owner, but he is not entitled to possession so long as the tenancy subsists. A GANESH PRASAD V. SHIB SINGH 261

Mortgagor and mortgagee—Limitation.

No question of adverse possession can arise as between mortgagors and mortgagees during the periods of limitation within which either of them can enforce their rights: nor can any acquiescence by the mortgagor not amounting to release of the equity of redemption be a bar or defence to a suit for redemption if the parties are otherwise entitled to redeem. O TILAK CHAND V. SHAMBHU SINGH, 7 O. L. J. 524; 23 O. C. 269; 2 U. P. L. R. (J. C.) 163 404

Waste land—Deposit of earth followed by other acts, whether amounts to dispossession—Suit for possession—Limitation.

In excavating a tank A deposited the earth on a strip of waste land belonging to B, he also removed some trees standing thereon and planted others of more value. In a suit by B brought more than 12 years afterwards to recover possession it was found that the earth was deposited by A with the intention of taking possession of the strip of waste land.

Held, that A's acts amounted to a dispossession of B, and B's suit, having been brought more than 12 years afterwards, was barred by limitation. C MOHARAJ BAHADUR SINGH V. PULIN MAL 386

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 4, 58, 63—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts—Suit for possession of pasture land, nature of—Ejectment—Revenue Court, jurisdiction of.

A suit for possession of land of which the defendant had the use for grazing cattle and for arrears of rent, is in effect a suit for ejectment against a tenant who is such by reason of his enjoying a right of pasturage in respect of the land, and as such the suit is cognizable only by a Revenue Court. A PARAM HANSMAN V. DASRATHMAN, 19 A. L. J. 292 770

s. 10—Ex-proprietary tenant, right of, to surrender holding.

There is nothing to prevent an ex-proprietary tenant from surrendering his holding, but if he does not do so, he cannot contract himself out of the provisions of section 10 of the Agra Tenancy Act. UPBR HARSARAN DAS V. DEBI SINGH, 2 U. P. L. R. (B. R.) 90 245

s. 14—Widow, when can claim benefit of section

In the absence of anything to show that a widow has succeeded directly to her husband's holding, she cannot claim the benefit of section 14 of the Agra Tenancy Act, by counting the period of her husband's occupation towards the acquisition of occupancy rights. UPBR DIP CHAND V. TOHFA, 2 U. P. L. R. (B. R.) 83 211

s. 22—Occupancy holding—Successor of tenant—Admission of stranger to share in cultivation, effect of.

The mere admission by the successor of an occupancy tenant of a person who is not a tenant to a share in cultivation does not operate to transfer to the latter any right in the tenancy. UPBR SRI KRISHNA DUTTA DUBE V. JAGESHAR UPADHIA, 2 U. P. L. R. (B. R.) 93 250

s. 34—Trespasser—Suit to eject trespasser as tenant, maintainability of.

Where a landlord chooses to treat a trespasser as a tenant and sues for ejectment, he is quite entitled to do so and section 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act applies to such a case. UPBR RAM SARAN V. TULSHI, 2 U. P. L. R. (B. R.) 90 238 ### ss. 34, 177—Appeal to District Judge against decision of Assistant Collector—Remand by District Judge—Appeal to High Court, whether lies.

There is no appeal to the High Court, from an order of remand passed by a District Judge in an appeal under the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act from the Court of an Assistant Collector. A JAI PRASAD V. DALSINGAR, 19 A. L. J. 143 991

s. 47—Enhanced rent, agreement to pay—Agreement unregistered, effect of.

An agreement to pay enhanced rent which is not registered as required by section 47 of the Agra Tenancy Act is invalid, and cannot be pleaded in answer to a suit for ejectment. UPBR BHAGWATI MISIR V. JHALAI CHANAR, 2 U. P. L. R. (B. R.) 94 260

s. 58—Ejectment—Person occupying land without payment of rent—Occupancy rights, accrual of.

A person who occupies land on sufferance without payment of any rent does not acquire occupancy rights as a tenant and is liable to ejectment as soon as the land-holder withdraws his sufferance.

UPBR AMIR HUSAIN V. ALLAH DIA, 2 U. P. L. R. (B. R.) 93 258

S. 164 (2)—Profits, suit for—Decree, form of.

Where a plaintiff claims, under section 164 (2) of the Agra Tenancy Act, on the basis of gross rental for his share of the profits for any given year, he cannot also be given a decree for arrears of past years, collected in the year in question. If clause (2) of section 164 is not applicable, he is entitled to a decree on the basis of actual collections made in that year, whether in payment of the demand for that year, or as arrears from former years but collected in that year. But he cannot be given a decree both on the basis of the gross rental and the actual collections.

A CHHABRAJI KUAR V. GANGA SINGH, 18 A. L. J. 66; 2 U. P. L. R. (A.) 272; 43 A. L. J. 643

S. 177—Jurisdiction, question of, not decided—Appeal, forum of.

An appeal under section 177 of the Agra Tenancy Act does not lie to the District Judge in a case in which no question of jurisdiction is in effect decided and in which it is not necessary to have any specific issue on that question. UPBR ROBU V. NIADAR MAL, 2 U. P. L. R. (B. R.) 95 262

S. 198—Rent, amount of, paid to third party—Good faith not pleaded—Section, whether applicable.

Where after the institution of a suit to recover arrears of rent, and after the filing of his defence, the defendant pays the amount due to a third person, the provisions of section 198 of the Agra Tenancy Act have no application. A JEONI V. KALLOO, 19 A. L. J. 298 837

Amendment of decree—Executing Court, power of—Construction of judgment—Costs, interest on, from what date to be allowed—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 35.

An executing Court as such has no power to amend decrees even to bring them in accordance with the judgment of the original Court.

Where the wording of a judgment can be read in either of two ways it would be quite wrong to presume that the correct reading is one which violates the provisions of both law and equity.

Interest should not be allowed to run on costs until such costs have been actually incurred.

A judgment directed that the plaintiff be given a decree for a certain sum, with proportionate costs and future interest from the date of institution of the suit till realisation, at Re. 1 per cent. per mensem:

Held, that the correct reading of the judgment was that interest was payable only on the principal sum decreed and not on the costs. L. UTTAM CHAND V. BALLA MAL 345

Appeal (Civil)—Contention not raised in memo. of appeal whether can be entertained at hearing.

The High Court will not entertain a contention at the hearing of an appeal which is not contained in the memo. of appeal and which was not brought to the notice of the lower Court. S. LALSING MALSING V. GIRDHARIDAS, 14 S. L. R. 224 263 dismissed in default of plea, whether appealable to Privy Council.

Appeal (Civil)—concl'd.

An order dismissing an appeal in default of the appellant's compliance with the rules of the Court as to the composition of the paper-book in the case is not appealable to the Privy Council. PAT RAJENDRA KISHORE V. KAMAKHYA NARAIN SINGH, 5 P. L. J. 719; 2 P. L. T. 112; (1921) Pat 97 285

(second)—Adverse possession, question of, mixed question of law and fact—Finding of fact, whether binding—Inference from such finding—High Court, power of.

The question of adverse possession is a mixed question of law and fact, and although a Court of second appeal is bound to accept as conclusive a finding on a question of fact, yet where the question is whether from the facts found an inference can fairly be drawn that possession is adverse, it is a question of law, which that Court is entitled to investigate. C. BALARAM GURIA V. SYAMA CHARAN MONDAL, 24 C. W. N. 1057; 83 O. L. J. 344 298

—Finding as to admissibility of document without proof—Finding, whether binding.

A finding of fact that a deed is admissible in evidence arrived at by an Appellate Court without adequate proof being offered to show its genuineness is not final or conclusive, and the High Court will, in second appeal, interfere if such finding has prejudiced the trial of the appeal. A. LOKMAN DAS V. GANGA SAHAJ 96

—Legitimacy—Finding of fact, whether binding.

Although a finding on the question of legitimacy is one of fact, it will not be upheld in second appeal where the lower Appellate Court has ignored important pieces of evidence and the strong presumption of the law in favour of legitimacy. L. SULAKHAN SINGH V. SANTA SINGH 375 —Limitation, plea of, whether can be raised for first time—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VIII, r. 2.

A question of limitation cannot be raised for the first time in appeal; such question must, under Order VIII, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, be raised by the defendant in his pleading. C. BHUSHAN CHANDRA PAL V. NARENDRA NATH KOOR, 82 O. L. J. 235 280

—Negligence or misconduct of Lambardar—Question of law

The question whether the acts or omissions of a Lambardar amount to negligence or misconduct under section 164 of the Agra Tenancy Act, is one of law and the High Court is not bound by a finding on that question, in second appeal. A. CHHABRAJI KUAR V. GANGA SINGH, 18 A. L. J. 863; 2 U. P. L. R. (A.) 272; 43 A. L. J. 643

—Plea on ground of inconvenience urged for first time, whether entertainable.

In a partition suit a plea on the ground of inconvenience, not urged in the Courts below, cannot be urged in second appeal. O. TAJAMMUL HUSAIN V. BANDE RAZA, 7 O. L. J. 638; 23 O. C. 281 433

—Point not raised in written statement, whether can be raised in second appeal.

A defendant is not entitled in second appeal to raise an objection which he omitted to raise in his written statement. M. ANGAM THU V. RAMALINGA LILLAI, 10 M. L. J. 57 766

Arbitration—Agreement to refer disputes arising out of contract—Several disputes—Successive awards, whether permissible.

Where by the terms of a contract the parties agree to refer all disputes arising on, or out of, it to arbitration, the right to make a submission is not exhausted by reason of the mere fact that one award final and complete has issued from it: there may be an indefinite number of awards, as it is possible to have further disputes over the same claim which are not covered by the first award, and the arbitrators have jurisdiction to make awards from time to time in disputes arising out of the contract, as such disputes arise. C BAL MUKUND RUIA v. GOPIRAM BHOTICA, 24 C. W. N. 775 195

— Award—Arbitrator, one, absence of, from one meeting, whether vitiates award.

An arbitration award is not vitiated by the mere fact that at one of the meetings of the arbitrators one of them was absent, where it is shown that nothing material was done at that meeting which in any way affected the award. M VARANASI RAMANNA v. KILLAMSETTI APPANNA, 12 L. W. 505 181

— Contract containing arbitration clause—Clause, whether imported into another contract by reference—Partial arbitration, whether allowable.

D. entered into a contract with a firm LJ. for the purchase of 30 bales of dhotis, the contract having embodied in it a clause for arbitration in case of disputes. D. sold the identical 30 bales to C. under a contract which was in the following terms:—"We sold the goods as were bought by us of Lakshmichand Jagannath, Batta (allowance, chafage, all terms according to Bahar (importing) firms' godown due according to Bazar interest, coolie hire, according to Bhiton (Bazar)." A dispute having arisen between C. and D., the latter instituted a suit in respect of 27 bales, alleging that C. had wrongly refused to accept delivery of the goods, and thereafter referred the matter in respect of the remaining 3 bales to arbitration, which resulted in an award in his favour. C. thereupon instituted proceedings for cancellation of the award, and on his application being refused, he appealed questioning the validity of the award on the grounds: first, that the arbitration clause embodied in the contract between the defendant and the importers was not incorporated into the contract between the plaintiffs and the defendant, and, secondly, that even if the arbitration clause be deemed to have been incorporated, the defendant, by reason of the institution of the suit in respect of 27 bales, was not competent to make a reference to arbitration with regard to the three remaining bales:

Held, (1) that the arbitration clause contained in the contract between D. and LJ. was not incorporated into the contract between D. and C. and the reference to arbitration by D. was completely ultra vires;

(2) that having instituted a suit in respect of 27 bales, D. was not competent to make a reference to arbitration in respect of the remaining three bales even if it be deemed that the arbitration clause in the contract between himself and LJ. had been incorporated in his contract with C. C CHATTURBHUJ CHANDUNMULL v. BASDEODAS DAGA, 47 C. 789; 33 C. L. J. 146 909

— Contract containing arbitration clause—Reference, after institution of suit—Suit not stayed—Award, effect of.

Where an action has been commenced upon a contract which contains a provision for reference to arbitration, even if a reference to arbitration has been made before the commencement of the suit, the award is of no effect unless the suit has been stayed pending the arbitration.

If the Court has refused to stay the action or if the defendant has abstained from asking it to do so, the Court has seisin of the dispute, and it is by its decision, and by its decision alone, that the rights of the parties are settled. C RAM PROSAD SURAJMULL v. MOHAN LAL LACHMINARAIN, 47 C. 752 895

Arbitration Act (IX of 1839), ss. 11

(2), 15 (1)—Award, filing of, by arbitrator—Notice of filing not given, effect of—Arbitrator proceeding ex parte—Notice, absence of—Award, validity of.

The moment an award is filed in Court by an arbitrator, it becomes enforceable as if it were a decree, and it is not necessary, before it is enforced, to show that notice of the fact of filing was given by the arbitrator to the parties concerned: the omission to give such notice would not destroy the operative character of the filed award.

Before an arbitrator proceeds ex parte he should give notice in writing to each of the parties, otherwise the award may be liable to be set aside. C UDAICHAND PANNA LALL v. DEBIBUX JAWANRAM, 47 C 951 987

— s. 15—Award, enforceability of—Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), s. 22—Application to execute award, whether application to enforce order.

Inasmuch as section 15 of the Arbitration Act, subject to certain requirements, makes an award itself directly enforceable, as if it were a decree of the Court, an application to execute the award, is not an application in execution of an order within the meaning of section 22 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. S UDHAVIDAS v. UKAMAL PHATAMAL, 14 S. L. R. 217 942

— s. 19—Stay of proceedings, order for—Jurisdiction—Discretion—Appeal, interference in.

Before the jurisdiction of the Court to make an order for stay of proceedings under section 19 of the Arbitration Act, can be invoked, it must be established beyond doubt that there is a valid submission: and before an order staying proceedings can be made the Court must be satisfied that there is no sufficient reason why the matter should not be referred in accordance with the submission, and that the applicant was, at the time when the proceedings were commenced and still remains, ready and willing to do all things necessary to the proper conduct of the arbitration.

The making of an order staying proceedings is a matter largely in the discretion of the Court, and when the discretion has been exercised, a strong case must be made out to justify the interference of a Court of Appeal. C KEDARNATH BABULAL v. SUMPATRAM DOOGUR, 47 C. 1020 951

Asthan, Sannyasi, nature of—Separate and personal property of Mahant—Burden of proof—Alienation by Mahant—Breach of trust.

An Asthan is essentially an institution of Sannyasi celibates and ascetics, having no worldly connections either of wealth or of family, and there is a presumption that the Mahant of an Asthan has no property other than Asthan property and that his income consists in the profits of that property and the offerings made to him in the character of trustee of the institution, but this does not disable him from owning property of his own, only those who allege the separate and personal character of any property found in the possession of a Mahant must prove their allegation: and in the absence of such proof, or of proof of unavoidable necessity, an alienation made by a Mahant is ultra vires. The fact that there have been a large number of alienations by successive Mahants proves nothing more than breaches of trust by the alienors. O BAMPAT v. DURGA BHARTI, 7 O. L. J. 547; 23 O. Benamdar for purchaser of separate account at Revenue sale, whether can maintain suit for joint possession—Bengal Revenue Sale Law (Act XI B. C. of 1859).

A suit for joint possession by the purchaser of a separate account in a sale held under the Bengal Revenue Sale Law is maintainable even though the plaintiff is a benamdar. C MOHESH CHANDRA DE v. KALI KANTA SORMA 708

Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation (XI of 1825), s. 4 (3)—Chur thrown up in large navigable river—Parties, rights of, how to be determined

The question of title to a chur thrown up in a large navigable river must be determined with reference to the condition of things prevailing at the time when the chur was first formed, and with reference to the terms of section 4 (3) of Regulation XI of 1825: but before applying this provision the Court must determine whether the bed of the river in which the chur is formed is the property of an individual, or is public domain. C SURENDRA NATH MITRA v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA 395

Bengal Land Registration Act (VII B. C. of 1876), s. 78, applicability of—Suit for arrears of rent by assignee of rent, whether maintainable.

Section 78 of the Bengal Land Registration Act is no bar to a suit for recovery of arrears of rent by an unregistered assignee of the rent from the landlord. PAT RAMESWAR PRASAD SINGH v. RAMJANAK SINGH, 6 P. L. J. 109; 2 P. L. T. 370 390

Bengal Municipal Act (III B. C. of 1884), 85 (a)—Tax, assessment of—Means and property liable to assessment—Measure of means and property.

In assessing a tax under section 85 (a) of the Bengal Municipal Act, the means and property of an assessee outside the Municipality cannot be taken into account, it is only the means and property within the Municipality that are liable to assessment. Bare ownership of a holding within a Municipality does not constitute rateable occupation; or, in other words, every owner is not an occupier just as every occupier is not an owner. In order to constitute rateable occupation there must be a use and enjoyment which is or is capable of being beneficial. C SAMSHUDDIN v. PYARI LAL DAS, 25 O. W. N. 242 498

Bengal Patni Taluks Regulation (VIII of 1819), ss. 8, 14—Sale, notice of, manner of publishing—Irregular sale, nature of—Second sale during pendency of proceedings to set aside first sale, effect of.

Where it is proposed to hold a sale under the Patni Taluks Regulation of a patni for arrears of rent due in respect thereof, the Regulation does not require that notice of the sale should be served personally on the defaulter; the posting of the notice at the Cutochery of the defaulter is a sufficient publication thereof, the receipt of the defaulter or his manager being merely evidence that the notice has been so published.

An irregular sale of a patni is not void, but voidable, but it can only be avoided by a suit properly framed under section 14 of the Patni Taluks Regulation.

Where during the pendency of proceedings to set aside an irregular sale, a second sale of the patni is held, the second sale is part of the first and will stand or fall with it. C BEJOY CHAND MAHATAR BAHADUR MAHARAJADHIRAJ OF BURDWAN v. MRITUNJOY GHOSE, 24 O. W. N. 786; 47 O. 782 182

The fact that since its creation a patni has diminished in area, from whatever cause, would not exempt the patni from the provisions of the Patni Regulation as to the summary levying of the rental. SHARAJINI DAS v. KAZI ABDUL 452

A sale held ostensibly under the Public Demands Recovery Act, by order of a Certificate Officer, without notifying the date, time and place of the sale is a nullity, and section 37 of that Act is no bar to a suit to obtain a declaration that the sale is null and void. C REAJUDDIN v. for rent against recorded tenants in actual occupation, whether operates as rent-decree.

The representatives of the original holders of a tenure did not follow the provisions of the law for giving notice of succession to the landlord and did not deposit the fee prescribed by the Bengal Tenancy Act. Two of them abandoned the tenure. The others remained in possession and had their names recorded in the books of the landlord as tenants in actual occupation. Default was thereafter made in the payment of rent in respect of the tenure, with the result that the landlord sued the recorded tenants and obtained a decree against them:

Held, that the tenure was fully represented in the suit and the decree which was obtained against the recorded tenants operated as a rent-decree. C ABHOY CHARAN DUTTA v. MONRANJAN RAI 510

— s. 22 (3), 49 (b)—Occupancy holding, acquisition of, by ijaradar from landlord—Sub-letting, effect of—Tenant inducted by ijaradar on holding, whether trespasser.

The plaintiffs were the owners of an osat taluq which was let out in ijara for a certain period. The ijara lease authorised the ijaradar to buy holdings at sales in execution of decrees for arrears of rent and also provided that during the term of the ijara he would be at liberty to sub-let the same. During the term of the ijara the ijaradar purchased a certain holding in execution of a decree for arrears of rent in respect thereof and sub-let the same to the defendants without any written agreement. On the expiry of the ijara lease the plaintiffs sought to eject the defendants as trespassers:

Held, that, having regard to the provisions of section 22 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act and also to the terms of the ijara lease, the holding continued and the defendants who were inducted upon the same by the ijaradar were in the position of under-raiyats, that, therefore, when the plaintiffs succeeded to the ijaradar in the possession of the holding, they took it burdened with the under-raiyats inducted by the ijaradar and the sub-letting not having been by a written lease, the defendants could not be ejected otherwise than after notice under section 49 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. C NAYANJAN BISHI v. Tenancy Act. C KUMARI DASYA v. HEMANTA KUMARI DEBI 402

— ss. 52 (1) (b), 179—Landlord and tenant—Deficiency in area of tenure—Rent, reduction of—Land in the Sunderbunds—"Permanently settled area."

The respondents held land in the Sunderbunds under a permanent mokurrari lease granted by appellant. They claimed a reduction of rent under section 52 sub-section 1 b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act on the ground that part of the land leased had been diluviated. Appellant opposed the reduction, relying on the terms of the lease and on section 179 of the Act, which permits the holder of a permanent tenure in a permanently settled area to grant a permanent mokurrari lease on any terms agreed between him and the tenant. The land had been granted by Government in 1680 to appellant's predecessor at a rent increasing for a period of years, after which it was subject to survey and measurement, and the proprietary right in the grant was to be "under conditions generally applicable to owners of estates not permanently settled."

Held, that the land was not proved to be in a "permanently-settled area" and that, consequently, respondents were entitled to reduction of rent irrespective of the terms of their lease. P C KHETRAMONI DAS v. JIBAN KRISHNA KUNDU, 25 C. W. N. 67; 40 M. L. J. 232; 33 C. L. J. 214 1

Berar Electoral Rules—concl'd.

Under rule 29 (1) of the Berar Electoral Rules, the Governor of the Province has power to dismiss an election petition in those cases only in which the required security for costs is not deposited in accordance with the provisions of rule 28. The figure 27 in rule 29 (1) is a misprint for 28.

The principle of the whole scheme of Elections under the Berar Electoral Rules is, that what is required to be done by the proposer, or by the secondor, or by the candidate, or by an elector, cannot be permitted to be done by his agent, unless there is clear authority for it. Where, therefore, the rules require the nomination paper of a candidate to be transmitted to the Returning Officer by the proposer and secondor, its transmission by the candidate is not a proper transmission and renders the nomination invalid.

The certification of the facts required by clause (ii) of Regulation II of the Berar Electoral Rules, need not necessarily be by means of only a single certificate. The certification of those facts by means of two or more certificates given by different officers would not render a nomination paper invalid. But where the certificate required to be appended to the nomination paper is obtained and appended by the candidate, instead of by the proposer and secondor, the nomination is invalid.

The declaration of an Election Agent made by a candidate does not require to be stamped to render it valid. The mere fact that such a declaration is written on a stamp-paper, and the signature of the candidate is attested by a Sub-Divisional Magistrate, would not alter the nature of the document, and make it an invalid declaration.

The fact that a candidate is, at the time of his nomination, a member of a Legislative Council constituted under the Government of India Act, 1912, does not disqualify him from seeking election to a Legislative Council constituted by the Government of India Act, 1919.

The mere fact that a nomination paper is posted by a peon under the directions of the secondor, does not render the nomination invalid. C P E C SADASHO WAMAN KELKAR v. R. V. MAHAJANI 870

Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act (II of 1918), s. 2—Landlord and tenant, whether includes tenant and sub-tenant—Standard rent, what is.

The only object of including in the definition 'landlord,' a tenant who sub-lets, and in the definition of 'tenant,' a sub-tenant, in the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act, is to extend the benefits of the Act to sub-tenants, and it was not intended that the standard rent should be determined by different standards between the original landlord and the tenant and between the tenant and the sub-tenant.

'Standard' means a rule or a mode and can only be one. The whole object of the Rent Act is to prevent tenants being made to pay rent which the Legislature considers excessive or unreasonable. In regard to the same premises, rent which the law regards as unreasonable or excessive between the original landlord and tenant ought not to be regarded as reasonable between the tenant and the sub-tenant. Similarly, rent which the law regards as reasonable between the original landlord and tenant ought not to be regarded as unreasonable between the tenant and the sub-tenant. Standard rent must mean the rent at which the premises were originally let. The standard rent is to be fixed in relation to premises and not in relation to persons, and can, therefore, be only one and not varying as between different individuals. B CHAPSI UMERSI v. By an indenture of lease certain premises were demised to plaintiff for five years on certain terms and conditions, one of which was that plaintiff would not assign the premises without the consent of the defendant, but that such consent should not be unreasonably withheld provided plaintiff remained responsible under the lease. Plaintiff applied to defendant for his consent to assign his interest for the residue of the term mentioned to a Limited Company, but defendant refused. Plaintiff then applied to the High Court on an originating summons for the determination of the question whether, upon the true construction of the indenture, he was entitled to assign the remainder of the term under the lease without the consent of the defendant. Defendant objected to the determination of the question on the ground that the plaintiff should proceed by means of a regular suit:

Held, that, under Chapter XIII, rule 9 of the Rules of the High Court, the procedure adopted by the plaintiff was correct, and that, on a proper construction of the indenture, plaintiff was entitled to assign the remainder of the term of the lease without the consent of the defendant. C DUCASSE v. A rent suit was tried by a Deputy Collector exercising the powers of a Deputy Commissioner under the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act and was decreed ex parte. The defendant's application to set aside the ex parte decree was dismissed in default, and a further application for restoration of the previous application was also dismissed. He then filed an appeal to the Deputy Commissioner who set aside the ex parte decree and remanded the suit for re-trial:

Held, (1) that there was no provision in the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act for restoration of an application to set aside an ex parte decree which had been dismissed for default, and that, therefore, the second application made by the defendant to the Deputy Collector was incompetent;

(2) that no appeal lay to the Deputy Commissioner against the order dismissing that application;

(3) that the Deputy Commissioner's order setting aside the ex parte decree was, therefore, without jurisdiction;

(4) that the Deputy Commissioner having acted without jurisdiction, his order could not be revised by the Revenue Authorities under section 217 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act;

(5) that, therefore, the High Court had jurisdiction to revise the order, which, being without jurisdiction, must be set aside. PAT MUNSHI LAL CHODHRY v. NIDHI RAM DUTTA, 3 U. P. L. R. (PAT.) 13 175

In order that a finding on a particular issue in a previous suit may operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit, it is not necessary that that finding should form the basis of the decree in that suit, but the insertion of the finding in the decree or its omission therefrom, as also its bearing on the general result of the suit, naturally form elements in considering whether the matter has been directly and substantially in issue in the previous suit.

In a previous suit the plaintiff sued the defendant in ejectment as trespassers and the latter pleaded that neither the plaintiff nor his predecessors-in-title were owners of the property and that the defendants were usufructuary mortgagees from some third persons who were the real owners. Both the Trial and Appellate Courts found against the defendants' plea but dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the finding that the mortgage to defendants was by the plaintiff's predecessors and an action in ejectment was not maintainable. In the present suit for redemption of the mortgage the defendants controverted the plaintiff's title, pleading that the finding in the prior suit that they were mortgagees from the plaintiff's predecessor was not res judicata:

Held, that though the finding was not the basis of the decree, as the question of title was directly and substantially in issue, the finding operated as res judicata in the present suit. M MUTHU PILLAI v. VEDA VYSA CHARIAR, 12 L. W. 277 397

Before any argument can be advanced on the language employed in Explanation (IV) of section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, it must be established to the satisfaction of the Court that the matter which is sought to be concluded on the principle of res judicata not only might have been made a ground of defence or attack in such former suit, but further that it ought to have been so made.

Where the evidence in support of one ground is such as might be destructive of the other ground, the two grounds need not be set up in the same suit. PAT RAMAN CHOUBEY v. BACHA MISIR, 2 P. L. T. 285 393

— s. 11, Expl. IV, O. II, r. 2—Mortgages, several—Successive suits by mortgagee, whether competent—Causes of action, distinct—Procedure.

Where two distinct mortgages are successively executed by the same debtor in respect of the same property and in favour of the same creditor, the causes of action on the two mortgages are distinct, and, although it is open to the mortgagee in bringing a suit upon the first mortgage to include the claim on the second mortgage, that course is not obligatory upon him. A subsequent suit, therefore, on the second mortgage is not barred either under Explanation IV to section 11 or under Order II, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code.

There is nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure or in the Transfer of Property Act to prevent the holder of two independent mortgages over the same property, who is not restrained by any covenant in either of them, from obtaining a decree for sale on each of them in a separate suit, subject, however, to this reservation that he cannot sell the property twice over, nor sell it under the second decree subject to the first. C NILU ROY v. The Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, is framed on the scheme of providing generally for the mode in which the High Courts are to exercise their jurisdiction, whatever it may be, while specifically excepting the powers relating to the exercise of Original Civil Jurisdiction, to which the Code is not to apply. It confers a general rule-making power saving only what is excepted in the body of the Code.

The Orders and rules made under the Code apply to the High Courts, unless the body of the Code contains something inconsistent with them. They are applicable to the jurisdiction exercisable under the Letters Patent, except that they do not restrict the express Letters Patent Appeal.

There is a distinction between rules which take away existing rights of appeal and rules which recognise those rights but regulate the procedure of the Court in which such appeals are pending. This distinction has been overlooked in Sabhapathi Chetti v. Narayansami Chetti, 25 M. 555; 11 M. L. J. 346 and in Sesha Ayyar v. Nagarathna Lala, 27 M. 121 at p. 123.

Order XLI, rule 10, applies to appeals brought under the Letters Patent. The words of that rule, directing the Court to reject an appeal when an order for security for costs is made and is not complied with during the period fixed, are mandatory and not

Civil Procedure Code—contd.

A minor appellant, whose appeal has been dismissed in default, cannot take advantage of section 6 of the Limitation Act for making an application for restoration of the appeal.

Order XLI, rule 19 of the Civil Procedure Code does not exhaust the powers of an Appellate Court to re-admit an appeal dismissed for default.

In a proper case, it is open to the Court to make an order re-admitting an appeal dismissed for default in the exercise of its inherent powers for the ends of justice. This power should, however, be sparingly used and only when a clear case is made out, but the power is exercisable without any reference to the period of limitation provided for an application to re-admit an appeal or any other proceeding.

Where the next friend of a minor appellant is of unsound mind, the absence of the minor at the date of the hearing of the appeal cannot be treated as default.

An order dismissing the minor's appeal for default in these circumstances would be set aside in the exercise of the inherent powers of the Courts. B SONBAI BABURAO v. SHIVAJIRAO KRISHNARAO, 28 Bom. L. R. 110; 45 B. 648. 919

There is nothing in Order II, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code to compel a plaintiff to include in one and the same action different causes of action even though they arise from the same transaction.

The test is this: If the plaintiff, on the allegations made in the plaint, is entitled to make a claim which he does not put forward in his suit he shall not be allowed in a subsequent suit to put forward that claim. To allow him to do that would be to permit him to split his cause of action; but if, on the allegations made in the plaint, he was not entitled to put forward a claim, there is nothing in Order II, rule 2, which prohibits him from putting forward that claim in a subsequent litigation.

The expression 'cause of action' means every fact which it would be necessary for the plaintiff to prove in order to support his right to the judgment of the Court.

The expression refers entirely to the grounds set forth in the plaint as the cause of action, or, in other words, to the media upon which the plaintiff asks the Court to arrive at a conclusion in his favour.

Where no date has as yet been fixed for the appearance of the defendant within the meaning of Order V, rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Court has no power to dismiss the suit for default under Order IX, rule 3 of the Code.

The failure of a plaintiff to appear on a date fixed for him to attend and find out what date has been fixed for the appearance of the defendant does not empower the Court to dismiss the suit for default. In such a case the Court should, notwithstanding the default of the plaintiff, fix a date for the appearance of the defendant and if, on the date so fixed, the plaintiff does not appear it can dismiss the suit under Order IX, rule 3. L INDAR SINGH v. Therefore, where a plaintiff fails to amend his plaint when directed to do so, the Court has no power, merely on this account, to dismiss the suit. L TOMLINSON v. GORAN

Where a ground of exemption from the law of limitation is stated in the plaint, the requirements of Order VII, rule 6, are satisfied, but this does not preclude the plaintiff from taking another ground to get over the bar of limitation, if he believes that the latter is the true ground. L PARMESHRI DAS v. Where, in such a case, the decree is passed by a Munsif's Court, an appeal lies from it, whatever the amount of the mesne profits decreed, to the Court of the District Judge under section 21 (2) of the Bengal, N. W. P. and Assam Civil Courts Act.

Where it is found that the defendants had conspired to keep the plaintiff out of the possession of land, a joint decree for mesne profits can be passed against them. PAT DINANATH SAHAI V. MAYAWATI KUER, 6 P. L. J. 54; 2 P. L. T. 143; (1921) PAT. 69 346

———— O. XXI, applicability of—"Sale," effect of—Ownership, when passes—Equity of redemption.

The provisions of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code apply to sales ordered under Order XXXIV of that Code, and where such a sale is ordered, the mere 'sale' has not the effect of divesting a person whose property has been sold of the ownership of his property, because, in many cases, the sale is liable to be revoked. It is only when the sale becomes 'absolute' upon an order confirming it that it has the effect of divesting the person whose property is sold of his title to it and of vesting it in the purchaser. Where, therefore, the mortgagor makes the deposit under rule 89 of Order XXI, his equity of redemption subsists, and the deposit has the effect of redeeming the mortgaged property. O. Where in a suit by two partners, a decree is passed for the recovery of a sum of money, the mere fact that one of the partners was dead at the date of the decree does not render the decree incapable of execution. In a suit for damages arising out of a tort the plaintiff is not required to implead as a defendant every person who is liable for the tort.

The only effect of suing some only out of a number of joint tort-feasors is that the judgment recovered against them bars a suit against the others.

Therefore, where in such a suit one of the defendants dies and his legal representatives are not brought on the record, the suit does not abate as a whole and a decree obtained in the suit is a good decree against those defendants who were living parties to it. PAT GAJO SINGH v. Where in connection with an application for the appointment of a Receiver of trust property by dispossessing the manager of the trustees, the latter's objection to such an appointment is disallowed and the Court proceeds to appoint a Receiver, the mere fact that he suggested the name of a person to be so appointed, would not preclude him from questioning the appointment on appeal. A MOHAMMAD ASKARI v. The word “judgment” in rule 4 of Order XLV of the Civil Procedure Code, refers to the judgment appealed against, that is, the judgment of the High Court and not the judgment of the Trial Court.

The proposition that, because certain suits were originally in the Court of first instance decided in one judgment, therefore, whatever may have happened to them subsequently and whether decided eventually in the High Court by the same judgment or by a number of judgments, there should, in such cases, be power to consolidate for the purpose of appeal to His Majesty in Council is to give a meaning to Order XLV, rule 4, which it was never intended to bear. The requirement of the rule is that the judgment which their Lordships of the Privy Council have to consider and from which an appeal is brought should be the same judgment in the consolidated appeals and not that they should have in the same case or in the same appeal to consider the effect of several separate judgments of the High Court. PAT DEIKO NANDAN PRASAD v. Where, long previously to the presenting of an application for winding-up a Company, the immovable property belonging to the Company was attached in execution of a decree, and was ultimately sold after a winding-up order had been passed and the Official Liquidator applied to have the sale set aside on the ground that, under section 232 of the Companies Act, the sale of the property was a putting into force of an execution within the meaning of that section:

Held, that, for the purposes of section 232 of the Companies Act, the execution was put in force on the date the property was attached, and as that date was long anterior to the date of the application for winding-up, the sale was not invalid.

Where property is repeatedly proclaimed and put up for sale, and no bidders are forthcoming, the fact that the sale is adjourned to, and held on, a subsequent date without issuing a fresh proclamation, although irregular, does not, in the absence of substantial loss suffered by the judgment-debtor in consequence of this procedure, vitiate the sale.

———, made through fear or under inducement, inadmissibility of.

A statement made to a Magistrate by an accused person through fear (consisting of a threat by the Police to put his womenfolk to trouble) is inadmissible. Similarly, a statement made as the result of an inducement by the Police, which caused the person making the statement to believe that he would be offered a free pardon, should be rejected. C EMPEROR v. ———, retracted, value of—Conviction, legality of.

Although a retracted confession is always open to some suspicion, yet if the Court is satisfied that it was voluntarily made and is true, it is bound, in the absence of coercion by the Police, to act on that belief so far as the person making it is concerned. Pat BIHARI ADRAKI v. EMPEROR, 22 Cr. L. J. 293 789

———, retracted, value of—Value of confession as against co-accused.

Though, as a matter of law, a conviction may be based upon a retracted confession if the Court can come to the unhesitating conclusion that the confession is voluntary, yet, as a matter of prudence, no conviction should be based upon such a confession. Whatever value may be attached to the retracted confession of an accused person as against himself, the value to be attached to such a confession as

Consent-decree—Relief against forfeiture, principle of, applicability of—Consent-decree providing for payment of money on certain date—Time for payment, whether can be extended.

Where a consent-decree gives effect to an agreement which embodies a right to forfeiture, the Court, in the exercise of its equitable jurisdiction, is competent to grant such relief against forfeiture, as it might have granted if there had been no consent-decree and a suit had been instituted to enforce the compromise.

Where a consent-decree provides for the payment of money on a prescribed date, time is not of the essence of the contract, and the Court is competent to grant an extension of time for making the payment. C KANDARPA NAG v. BANWARI LAL NAG, 33 C. L. J. 244 864

There is a distinction between an acknowledgment which is sufficient for the purposes of section 19 of the Limitation Act and the promise which is required by section 25 of the Contract Act. An acknowledgment no doubt implies a promise to pay, but in order to create a new contract, as required by section 25 of the Contract Act, it is necessary that the promise to pay should be expressed.

Where a debt due by a joint Hindu family was divided into three equal portions and each of the three branches of the family acknowledged a several liability to pay one portion of the debt:

Held, that this limitation of liability was in itself sufficient consideration to support a new contract which might be implied from the terms of the acknowledgment apart altogether from the provisions of section 25 of the Contract Act. PAT RAM BHADUR SINGH v. Judi is payable by an Inamdar to Government, and where he has been so remiss as to lose his right of levying assessment on occupancy tenants, he cannot recover the sum paid by him as judi from them under section 69 of the Contract Act, inasmuch as the tenants are not bound by law to pay judi. B BHIMABAI PADAPPA DESAI v. (v) (c)—Suit for possession of "religious land"—Court-fee payable—Valuation, method of.

In a suit for possession of land the plaint must be stamped according to the value of the subject-matter, and where the subject-matter is land which pays no revenue and has produced no profits during the year next before the date of presenting the plaint, the value must be deemed to be the amount at which the Court shall estimate the land with reference to the value of similar land in the neighbourhood, and the same principle is applicable where the land in suit is "religious" land.

The mere fact that the land is "religious" does not render it incapable of valuation with reference to the value of similar land in the neighbourhood. U B MAUNG MEIK v. KUMARA, 3 U. B. R. (1920) 236. 5

Plaintiff alleged that defendant had sold certain land to him and had received part of the sale consideration. Plaintiff now sued for possession of the land and also prayed that defendant be ordered to execute a deed of sale and have it registered on receipt of the balance of the price :

Held, that the suit was one for possession of land, the prayer as to the execution of the sale-deed being merely ancillary, and that Court-fees were payable in accordance with clause (v) of section 7 of the Court Fees Act. L GOPAL DAS v. PARMANAND 512

— ss. 10 (ii), 12, 17—Suit for specific performance and possession—Court-fee payable—Court-fee, deficiency of, order for payment of, form of.

Inasmuch as in a suit for specific performance of a contract of sale, and for possession of the property agreed to be sold, the relief for specific performance is the main relief and is not ancillary to the claim for possession, a separate Court-fee is, under section 17 of the Court Fees Act, payable on such relief both in the Original Court and the Court of Appeal.

Where in an appeal by the defendant it is discovered that there is a deficiency in the amount of Court-fees paid both on the plaint and the memorandum of appeal, the proper order is to direct the parties to make good the deficiency, and to direct that, in the event of non-compliance with such order, the suit or appeal or both do stand dismissed under section 10 (ii) read with section 12 of the Court Fees Act. O RAM NIDH v. Where a substantive charge is made against a person, and that charge breaks down, it is improper for the Court to make use of section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code and bind him over in security.

The mere fact that a person is suspected of particular crimes is no justification for demanding security from him. Evidence that a person had been suspected and named in a large number of cases extending over a considerable interval may, however, be very useful corroboration of general evidence of bad reputation.

Conversely, in a doubtful case the fact that a person has never been suspected of any offence may weaken the general evidence of reputation which is given against him. O RAJA RAM v. EMPEROR, 23 O. C. 371; 22 Cr. L. J. 273 673

Where in a case under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code the prosecution witnesses testify merely to the reputation of the accused, and know nothing about him beyond that reputation, and are entirely ignorant of the circumstances of, or of the business carried on by, the accused, an order requiring him to furnish security is not justified. A KALLU v. they were reputed habitual thieves and house-breakers and were placed before a Magistrate who fixed a date for evidence, with the object of issuing a notice under section 112 of the Code and detained the accused in custody without issuing any notice. On the date fixed the Magistrate recorded the evidence given by the Police and treated it as given, in the hearing under section 110, and, without giving the accused the slightest warning or opportunity of obtaining legal assistance, called upon them to conduct their case:

Held, that the procedure of the Magistrate was wholly irregular and vitiated the proceedings.

Before a hearing under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code can by law take place, it is incumbent on the Magistrate, under section 112, to make an order setting forth the substance of the information which he has received, the amount of the bond to be executed, the period for which it is to be executed and the number, character and class of sureties, if any, required. Merely informing an accused person that he is a suspected thief is not sufficient, as, however substantial that expression may be as an offensive description of an individual, it gives the person alleged to be that character not the slightest intimation as to the grounds on which it is based.

Where a party applies for revision and obtains an order issuing notice to show cause, he should at the hearing confine himself to the grounds upon which that order was made. A RAJBANSI v. EMPEROR, 18 A. L. J. 678; 42 A. 646; 22 Cr. L. J. 223. 420

Where the statement of an accused person to a Committing Magistrate contains an admission as to his previous conviction, that portion of his evidence should not be read at the close of the prosecution evidence at his trial in the Court of Session, before the assessors have given their opinion, as, to do so is to contravene the principle of section 310 of the Criminal Procedure Code and is sufficient to vitiate the trial.

It is illegal, during the course of the trial of an accused person for a substantive offence, to record evidence of a previous conviction. Such evidence amounts to evidence of bad character and is expressly forbidden by section 54 of the Evidence Act, unless and until the accused offers evidence of good character.

In a suit upon a hand-note executed by R. for himself and his brother L., R. appeared and resisted the claim and the plaintiff gave up his claim against him. L. did not appear and the Court, finding the claim true, passed an ex parte decree against him. After this, upon an application by R. it was found that the paper on which the note was written was issued on a date subsequent to the date of the note, whereupon R. applied for sanction to prosecute the plaintiff: the Court granted the application without notice to the plaintiff and at the same time called upon him to show cause why the ex parte decree should not be vacated. Plaintiff moved the High Court to quash the order directing his prosecution :

Held, that, in the face of the finding that the claim on the hand-note was true, the order directing the prosecution of the plaintiff without deciding the genuineness or otherwise of the document in the presence of the plaintiff and R., the order was wholly illegal and without jurisdiction, and that, although no notice is essential in a proceeding under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, yet, in the circumstances of the present case, notice was necessary, and the order having been passed without notice, it was wholly invalid. Pat RAKHAL MOHAN ROY v. It is only in the case of an alienation by a woman that the alienee has to show that the alienor's income was insufficient to provide the money required. Where the alienor is a man, all that has to be considered is whether the purpose for which the alienation was effected was a necessary purpose.

A just debt need not be one incurred for necessary purposes.

It is not necessary for an alienee, who is also the antecedent creditor, to prove that all the previous debts were incurred for necessity. It is only where the previous debts, besides not being for necessity, are unreasonable or prove reckless extravagance or waste, or a design to injure the reversioner's interests, that a distinction arises between the case of an alienation in favour of the antecedent creditor, who is prima facie fixed with knowledge of the nature of the debts, and an alienation in favour of a third person who cannot be presumed to have such knowledge. L KANHI RAM v. In order to sustain a plea of cruelty in an action for divorce on the ground that one of the parties to the marriage is suffering with syphilis, it must be shown that the disease has been actually communicated to the complainant, and that the complainant was not only ignorant of the existence of the disease at the time of its communication, but that it was knowingly and wilfully communicated.

The existence of syphilis at the time a contract to marry is entered into, or the incurring of the disease after such contract is entered into, furnishes a good defence in an action for breach of promise of the contract to marry, even though the disease was acquired after the making of the contract but through no wrongful act of the defendant.

It is an easement which is not merely necessary for the reasonable enjoyment of the dominant tenement, but one without which that tenement cannot be used at all. Such an easement lasts only so long as the necessity exists; for a grant arising out of the implication of necessity cannot be carried further than the necessity of the case requires.

A High Court is competent, in the exercise of the power of superintendence vested in it under section 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, to set aside proceedings instituted without jurisdiction by a Subordinate Court under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code; such power of superintendence can be exercised notwithstanding section 435 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The High Court may make consequential or incidental orders in the exercise of its power of superintendence over Subordinate Courts, which may be invoked, if occasion should arise, to reach and remedy all forms of judicial high-handedness.

Owing to a dispute between a landlord and his tenants as to the right of the former to lac growing on trees, the District Magistrate apprehended a breach of the peace and initiated proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and by a subsequent order attached the trees with the lac thereon; the lac was collected and some of it sold, the sale-proceeds being deposited in the Treasury and the unsold lac stored away: the High Court set aside the proceedings as being without jurisdiction, and issued a rule calling upon the District Magistrate and the tenants to show cause why the sale-proceeds of the lac and the unsold lac should not be made over to the landlord, or why such order should not be passed as to the Court might seem proper:

Held, (1) that the High Court had inherent power to give directions as to the disposal of property attached in a criminal proceeding initiated without jurisdiction as might be necessary in the interests of justice;

(2) that in the present case the proper order was to keep the sale-proceeds of the lac and the unsold lac in the custody of the Subordinate Judge of the District pending the decision of a suit to be instituted by the landlord for declaration of his right to the lac, and that, in default of such suit being instituted, the net sale-proceeds of the lac be distributed rateably among the tenants. C ALI MUHAMMAD MANDAL v. In such a case there is no personal estoppel preventing the widow from disputing the validity of the adoption and recovering her husband's properties from the adoptee unless the latter's position has been prejudiced.

Where a widow sued for the recovery of her husband's properties both for herself and her co-widow, impleading the latter as a defendant, the Court can pass a decree for the entire property if the co-widow assents to such a course during the trial. M RAMACHARI v. Antecedent debt—Necessity, proof of, whether necessary—Pious obligation of sons, extent of—Separation, whether affects obligation—Secured and unsecured debts, distinction between.

It is only when legal necessity cannot be established that the question of antecedent debt becomes material.

A pious obligation which arises only on the death of an ancestor and an antecedent debt which may support an alienation while the ancestor is alive, are distinct grounds on which justification for an alienation may be pleaded.

There is no authority for the proposition that the pious obligation of a son or grandson to pay his ancestor's debts depends on whether the two were joint or separate in estate. The doctrine is founded on religious considerations to which the question of jointness or separation is entirely irrelevant.

Where a Hindu is under a pious obligation to pay a debt and pays it off by incurring another debt, the latter in turn becomes an antecedent debt binding on his sons.

Where the ancestor is dead, the pious obligation to pay his debts is not concerned with the question whether the debts are secured or unsecured, but only with the question whether they are lawful debts not incurred for an illegal or immoral purpose. O RAM SARAN v. Antecedent debt, nature of—Alienation—Transaction, when should be upheld.

In order to render a debt antecedent there must not only be priority in time but real dissociation in fact from the mortgage sought to be enforced. Where, therefore, a person borrows money on a mortgage a little more than a fortnight after a prior mortgage there is not that dissociation which would render the latter a debt which was properly antecedent.

In order to validate an alienation either by sale or mortgage, two elements are necessary, namely, first, that the purpose for which the money was obtained is a purpose necessary by the law, and, second, that there is a pressure on the estate, sufficient to render the alienation necessary.

Where, if only that amount had been borrowed which the Court finds for legal necessity or antecedent debt, it would still have been necessary to execute the mortgage in suit, the transaction should be upheld. If not, it should be set aside on condition of the creditor being re-paid with interest the amount which he has validly advanced. O UMRAO SINGH v. GAYA PRASAD, 23 O. C. 374 647

——— Mortgage of family property, when binding on family—Burden of proof.

A mortgage of family property with the object of raising funds for the purchase of zemindari shares in a village, such purchase being for the benefit of the family and not detrimental to its interests, is binding on all the members who belong to the family. In such a case it is not necessary for the mortgagee to prove that the money raised by the mortgage was actually applied towards the purchase of the zemindari. It is enough if he proves that a representation was made to him that the zemindari was to be purchased and that after reasonable enquiry he believed the representation to be true.

Where a mortgage-deed of family property contains a recital of a previous mortgage and the object of the subsequent mortgage is to pay off the previous mortgage, the validity of which is admitted, both the previous and subsequent mortgages are binding on the family. A TULA RAM v. ——— Property inherited by reversioner, nature of—Mortgage by father, when binding on sons—Pious obligation, nature of—Contingent obligation, whether can be repudiated.

Under the Hindu Law property acquired by a reversioner by inheritance from a collateral is not joint family property, and in respect of such property the inheritor possesses an absolute power of disposal, and his sons and grandsons do not acquire any right in that property by birth so as to enable them to impeach a transfer thereof.

A mortgage by a Hindu father cannot validly affect the joint family estate unless it is made for family necessity or for the family benefit, or to pay an antecedent debt, either binding on the family by reason of its having been taken for family purposes, or binding in consequence of the pious obligation on the sons, where it exists, to pay the same if not tainted with immorality.

Although, during the lifetime of a father there is no pious obligation on his sons to pay his debts, there is nevertheless a contingent obligation on him to pay which he cannot repudiate unless he shows that the debt was taken for immoral purposes: so that if the joint family property has passed out of the family to pay off such an antecedent debt either under a conveyance executed by the father or under a sale held in execution of a decree for the father's debt, the son cannot recover back the property unless he can show that the obligation arising out of the antecedent debt was of a character which he was not in any contingency liable to discharge. O BHARAT SINGH v. In such a suit it is not necessary to decide a contest between the defendants inter se as to who is legally entitled to the estate. A SARASUTI TEWARIN v. NANDAN, 18 A. L. J. 828; 2 U. P. L. R. (A.) 280 99

The fact that a Raj is impartible does not make it separate or self-acquired property. It may in fact be self-acquired or it may be family property of a joint undivided family. If the latter, succession will be regulated according to the rule which obtains in an undivided joint family, so far as the selection of the person entitled to succeed is concerned, i. e., he will be designated by survivorship, although then, according to the custom of impartibility, he will hold the Raj without the others sharing it. P C BAIJNATH PRASAD SINGH v. ——— Joint family—Self-acquisitions—Partible and impartible property—Gains of sons, when impartible—Without detriment to joint estate, meaning of—Burden of proof.

Hindu Law—contd.

In a joint Hindu family the rule is that the acquisitions of the members are joint property and partible. Gains of science made without any detriment to the father's estate are, however, excepted.

It was originally sufficient to make such gains partible, that the earner had been maintained out of family funds during his education. This was later on narrowed down, first to the receipt of the education itself at the family expense, and later still education generally was narrowed to specialised education, which is now the basis of the rule.

The burden of proving that the science was acquired without detriment to the family estate is on the acquirer.

It is not necessary to make gains of science partible that they should result directly from the use of joint family funds. Nor does their partibility depend on causa proxima, nor is it negatived by the intervention of the personal element of the individual co-parcener's character.

Once it is found that an unseparated member was originally equipped for the calling in which he made his gains by a special training at the expense of the patrimony, his personal earnings and acquisitions remain partible throughout his life. On the other hand, he can sever from the family at will on the footing of bringing his accumulations into hotchpot and without any liability as to future earnings.

In the present case the earnings of an Indian Civil Servant were held to be partible property and as such liable for the family debts. P C AMAR NATH v. FIRM OF HUKAM CHAND-NATHU MAL, 19 A. L. Where the adoption of a person has not been in the Dattaka form, he cannot, under the Mitakshara, succeed collaterally in the family of his adoptive father.

Under the Mitakshara, a sister has no right of succession to the estate of her deceased brother.

Succession—Bandhus, rule of succession as between different classes of—Mother's paternal aunt's son, whether to be preferred to mother's sister's grandson—"Sons", whether include grandsons

In the Mitakshara system bandhus are of three kinds: related to the person himself, atma bandhus, to his father, pitri bandhus, or to his mother, matri bandhus. The right of succession among these three classes is governed by the propinquity of the class, no pitri bandhu succeeds until the class of atma bandhus is exhausted and no matri bandhu succeeds until the classes of atma bandhus and pitri bandhus are exhausted.

Hindu Law—contd.

The rule is not dependent on individual propinquity or on the efficacy of offerings to a deceased person. A bandhu must, in order to be heritable in a female line, fall within the fifth degree from the common male ancestor, and must be so related to the deceased person that they were mutually sapindas of one another; but if these conditions are satisfied the rule takes effect. For instance, a mother's sister's grandson, being an atma bandhu, would succeed in preference to a mother's paternal aunt's son being a matri bandhu.

position and powers of—Pronami, whether personal property of Mahant—Residence of Mahant—Cost of up-keep, whether to be borne by endowment.

The pronami offered by the faithful to the Mahant of a Hindu religious endowment is the personal property of the Mahant and is no part of the income of the endowment.

There is a fundamental distinction between the offerings made to the deity and the offerings made to the Mahant personally. If offerings are made to the deity, they belong to the endowment and must be applied by the Mahant for the purposes of the endowment; on the other hand, if offerings are made by the faithful to the Mahant personally, they do not become merged in the income of the endowment.

Whether a particular offering is made to the deity or to the Mahant personally, depends upon the intention of the faithful devotee and no inflexible rule can be formulated, nor can any general test be prescribed, for determining whether on a particular occasion the offering was made to the deity or to the Mahant personally.

Where by a consent order the pronami, or personal offering to the Mahant of a religious endowment, is not to be treated as part of the income of the endowment, that order is binding on the parties so long as it stands.

The dwelling-house of a Mahant, being part and parcel of a religious endowment, must be maintained in suitable condition as the proper residence of the spiritual head of the endowment, out of the income of the endowment. C KUMUD BAN v. TRIPIRA CHARAN 464.

The institution of a suit by the reversionary heir for possession shows his election to treat the alienation as a nullity, and in such a suit it is not necessary for him to ask for a declaration that the alienation is inoperative, nor is it essential that he should take steps, before the institution of the suit to avoid the alienation.

A presumptive reversioner, whose interest in an estate is nothing better than a spes successionis cannot deal with such an interest so as to pass any title to a transferee, but if he joins in an alienation of the estate and has the full benefit of the transaction, he is estopped, when the reversion falls to him, from claiming the same property on the ground that at the time of the alienation he could not pass any title in the property. M SHUNMUGHA VELAYUDHAM CHETTY v KOYAPPA CHETTIAR, (1920, M. — Will, construction of—Donee, estate taken by—Gift over, validity of.

The Will of a Hindu testator contained the following clause.—“My wife will be the owner of this house. She will be at liberty to alienate it or dispose it of according to her wishes. None of my descendants will have any concern with it during her lifetime. If my wife does not give or alienate it to any person, it will remain the joint property of my grandsons”:

Held, (1) that the widow obtained an absolute estate in the house under the Will;

(2) that the gift over in favour of the grandsons was null and void.

In interpreting a Will the whole of it must be read, its language must receive its literal construction, its wording must be construed in its plain ordinary meaning in its plain and obvious sense, no portion of it should be treated as redundant and contradictory and the ambitions and wishes of the testator with respect to the devolution of his property must be taken into consideration.

The word ‘malik’ implies ‘absolute ownership’ unless there is anything in the context or surrounding circumstances to qualify such meaning, and it is not so qualified by the fact that the donee is a widow.

If an estate is given in terms which confer an absolute estate to a named donee, and, then further interests are given merely after or on the termination of that donee’s interest, and not in defeasance of it, his absolute interest is not cut down and the further interests fail.

When an absolute interest has been given to the first taker, followed by a gift over of what may not be required by him, the gift over, though couched in the most direct and precise words, is void for uncertainty. L MOHAN LAL v. NIRANJAN DAS 619

An inam grant may be no more than an assignment of revenue, and even where it is or includes a grant of land, what interest in the land passes must depend on the language of the instrument and the circumstances of the case.

Without apt words such a grant does not pass the right to minerals.

Title-deeds issued by the Inam Commissioner in Madras can confer no higher title than was originally granted; they cannot vest in the Inamdars a subject-matter not already belonging to them.

The fact that the Madras Government in its standing orders at one time disclaimed the mineral rights in enfranchised inam lands does not preclude the Secretary of State from claiming those rights.

(iv), 11—Royalties, whether profits of business—Amount paid as cesses, whether to be deducted in assessing income—Income, meaning of.

The owner of a coal mine receiving royalty upon coal is not a person earning profits from a business. His income falls under section 5 (vi), Income Tax Act, as an income derived from other sources and should be computed in accordance with the provisions of section 11 of the Act. In assessing such income no deduction can be made in respect of the amount paid as cesses.

The term “income” may be described as the annual or periodical yield in money or reducible to a money-value arising from the use of real or personal property or from labour or services rendered; but in some cases, e.g., income derived from house property, the yield must be taken as the bona fide annual value, and not necessarily as the actual yield. PAT JYOTI PRASAD SINGH DEO, In the matter of, 6 P. The interest of a monthly tenant in property which is being acquired under the Land Acquisition Act comes to an end when the property vests in the ## Land Acquisition Act - concl'd.

Collector under section 16 of the Act. The effect of the acquisition and the resultant vesting is equally effective and complete in the case of acquisition undertaken by Government on the application of the Commissioner under section 91 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act.

The vesting contemplated by section 91 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act is such as would result under the Land Acquisition Act.

Section 91 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act pro tanto modifies the provisions in the Land Acquisition Act so as to vest the property in the Corporation on payment of compensation awarded, instead of in the Government and, therefore, no transfer from Government to the Corporation is needed.

The provisions of section 31 of the Land Acquisition Act do not apply in the case of acquisitions made by virtue of the provisions of section 91 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act and payment of the compensation amount by the Commissioner is enough.

The Crown is not bound by the provisions of any Act unless directly or by necessary implication referred to therein, and for this purpose the Crown means not only the King but also Officers of State acting on behalf of the Crown in discharge of their executive duties. The provisions of the Bombay Rent Act, therefore, cannot affect the rights and powers of Government and their Officers under the Land Acquisition Act.

The Bombay Rent Act was not intended to apply to premises acquired under the Land Acquisition Act for public purposes. The whole object of such an acquisition is to get the land immediately for useful public purposes and it would be defeating that object to lay down that the public body acquiring the land is not entitled to immediate possession. The general provisions of the Rent Act cannot be held by implication to repeal and override particular and special enactments like the Land Acquisition Act and the Municipal Act. B BOMBAY MUNICIPALITY V.  — s. 19—Acknowledgment—Debt referred to in subsequent document—Presumption—Acknowledgment of liability; what amounts to.

Where the acknowledgment of a debt is contained in a document which does not include any definite and certain reference to a debt, the subject-matter of a suit, the presumption, in the absence of any other debt proved to exist, is that the debt acknowledged is the debt under consideration, and the burden of proving the contrary rests on the person disputing the debt.

"An acknowledgment of liability" under section 19 of the Limitation Act need not necessarily be in respect of the particular relief prayed for in a suit or application. It is a sufficient acknowledgment if it is of liability, whether pecuniary or in relation to other obligations, and is in respect of the property or right which is the subject-matter of the suit or application. The identity of the liability acknowledged need not correspond with the nature of the relief which a plaintiff seeks on the cause of action which embraces his right, and upon which he comes into Court, nor need the specification of the nature of the property or right be exact. O JAGESHAR SINGH v. The limitation applicable to an application for a final decree in a mortgage-suit is that provided by Article 181 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, and commences to run from the date when the preliminary decree becomes conclusive between the parties.

Where a decree in a mortgage-suit is against separate sets of defendants for separate amounts, and some only of the defendants appeal and confine their appeal to the amounts decreed against them, the decree as regards the non-appealing defendants becomes conclusive upon the expiry of the period of limitation for an appeal from that decree, or on the expiry of the date fixed for payment of the amount decreed if that should be a later date, and not the date of the decree in the appeal of the appealing defendants, because that appeal is limited to that part of the decree which directs the property of the appellants to bear a proportionate part of the decretal amount, is not an appeal against the whole decree. Consequently, an application for a final decree in such a case against the non-appealing defendants, made more than three years after the preliminary decree has become conclusive, would be barred by limitation.

Where a decree for sale in a mortgage-suit provides for payment of the amount of a prior mortgage as a condition precedent to sale of the mortgaged property, but omits to specify the date on which such payment is to be made, the payment ought to be made or tendered within a reasonable time, and, as such a decree is a decree for redemption of that mortgage, payment should be made within six months of the decree. A GAYAN SINGH v. In this application he specified the names of the judgment-debtor and the surety, but sought execution only as against the property of the judgment-debtor. More than three years after the date of this application, the decree-holder applied to execute the decree as against the surety:

Held, (1) that the limitation applicable to the application was that laid down in Article 182 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act;

(2) that the previous application did not operate to save limitation as against the surety, inasmuch as no step was sought to be taken under that application as against the surety;

the tenant continuing in possession. In a suit to recover possession brought after the enforcement of that Act, it was pleaded that, by virtue of section 6 thereof, the tenant had acquired a permanent right of occupancy when the Act came into force, and was, therefore, entitled to resist the suit:

P. now brought the present suit, under sections 77 and 192 of the Madras Estates Land Act, to recover rent on the basis of the lease. The suit was contested on the ground that D. having been admitted to possession of ryoti land, within the meaning of section 25 of the Act, he was not liable for rent:

Held, that as D. was previously in possession as usufructuary mortgagee up to the date of the lease, he could not be said to have been admitted to possession of ryoti land at the date of the lease; that section 25 of the Madras Estates Land Act had no application to the case, and that D. was liable for rent according to the terms of the lease. M RAJANDBAMANIA DEVI GARU v. A third person who makes purchases of moveables, including decrees and other debts, for consideration from the karnavan of a Malabar tarwad is not bound to see to the application of the purchase-money or to make enquiries whether there was necessity for the alienation.

A purchaser of property for consideration from a person having power to convey full title to the property is entitled to rely on all the powers vested in his vendor, which could enable that vendor to convey the complete title professed to be conveyed notwithstanding that the vendor mentions in the sale-deed that he derives his right to convey title by reason of facts whose truth or strength can be successfully attacked. False recitals as to under what particular state of facts he obtained his power to convey will not affect the title of the transferee, provided that the transferor has got the power to give an absolute title and professes to convey such absolute title.

Misjoinder of parties—Suit against several defendants—Suit withdrawn as against some, whether involves dismissal of suit.

Plaintiffs, proprietors of a village, sued to eject three persons, who were brothers, from a piece of land which was alleged to be shamilat land. Subsequently, finding that one of the defendants was on field service, the plaintiffs withdrew their claim as against that defendant and reduced it to two-thirds of the land in suit. A decree was passed in their favour. On appeal the District Judge dismissed the suit on the ground of non-joinder of a necessary party :

Mortgage—Accretion to mortgaged property—Intention to keep accretion as separate acquisition—Merger—Redemption

The general principle is that any acquisitions by the mortgagee are treated as accretions to the mortgaged properties and are, therefore, subject to redemption. But though the mortgagee may treat the acquisitions as accretions to the mortgaged property, he may, if he chooses, keep them for his own benefit and distinct from the mortgaged property. PAT MAHESHWAR PRASAD SINGH v. Muhammadian Law—Legitimacy—

Acknowledgment of legitimacy, effect of—Marriage, disproof of—Legitimacy and legitimation, difference between.

There is a difference between legitimacy and legitimation. Legitimacy is a status which results from certain facts. Legitimation is a proceeding which creates a status which did not exist before. In the proper sense, there is no legitimation under the Muhammadan Law.

An acknowledgment of legitimacy raises a presumption of marriage, but such presumption is capable of being displaced by contrary proof. Such an acknowledgment is a declaration of legitimacy and not a legitimation, and is, therefore, liable to be contradicted.

Once the fact of no marriage is established, no acknowledgment of legitimacy has any effect. P C HABIBUR RAHMAN v. ALTAH ALI, 47 M. L. J. 510; 33 C. L. J. 479; 19 A. L. J. 414; 23 Bom. L. R. 636; (1921) M. W. N. 366; 29 M. L. T. 354 837

Where lands in British India are held on military service tenure, there is good reason for holding that no one of the successive tenants could deal with the land so as to deprive the next holder of the source from which his duties might be discharged.

In the Southern Districts of Madras, sundry palayams were originally held on military service tenure and subject to the payment of a tribute to the paramount power. But these military service tenures were abolished and determined by a Proclamation of the Governor in Council, dated 1st

Held, that the accused were guilty of offences under section 353 read with section 225 of the Penal Code.

The duty of a Criminal Court is to get to the bottom of a case before it and to see that every scrap of relevant evidence is brought before it.

The difference between the trial of a civil and a criminal case is that, in the former, it is the duty of the parties to place their case before the Court as they think best, whereas in the latter it is the duty of the Court to bring all relevant evidence on the record and to see that justice is done. A. Where a mortgagee seeks to enforce a mortgage executed by a person within two years of his insolvency, the onus, under section 55 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act and section 38 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, rests upon the mortgagee to show that the transaction was executed in good faith and for consideration. The fact that the Official Assignee has moved to expunge proof of the mortgage which he had admitted under section 38 of the Second Schedule to the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, does not alter the onus of proof, as such admission is in no sense an adjudication.

A suit for rent was instituted on the Small Cause Court Side of a Munsif's Court. The defendant applied for and obtained an order under section 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act for presentation of the plaint to a Court having jurisdiction to try the question of title. The plaint was then re-presented to the Munsif's Court on the Original Side, when the parties agreed that there was no question of title and wished the suit disposed of as a Small Cause Court suit. — s. 16—Pre-emption, suit for, on ground of vicinage—Property transferred by pre-emptor to wife—Sale held ineffectual as against creditors—Pre-emptor, whether owner.

Plaintiff sued to pre-empt the sale of a house on the ground that he was the owner of an adjoining house. It appeared that the latter house had been sold by the plaintiff to his wife by means of a registered conveyance and that the wife had effected a mortgage of the house. The sale in favour of the wife had, however, been held to be ineffectual as against the creditors of the plaintiff. The plaintiff now contended that he was still the owner of the house and was entitled to pre-empt the sale of the house in dispute:

Held, (1) that the judgment holding that as between the plaintiff's wife and his creditors the sale in favour of the wife was ineffectual proved no more than that the sale in favour of the wife had been questioned by the plaintiff's creditors;

(2) that as between the plaintiff and his wife the latter was still the owner of the house;

Punjab Tenancy Act—conold.

In a contest between the landlord and the collaterals of a deceased occupancy tenant with regard to the succession to the tenancy, the burden of proving that the requirements of the proviso to section 59 of the Punjab Tenancy Act have been fulfilled lies on the collaterals.

The mere fact that the collaterals are in possession of the land and that mutation has been effected in their favour, does not shift the burden of proof on to the collaterals.

The Civil Courts have to come to an independent finding in such cases and cannot base their decision merely on an opinion formed by the Revenue Authorities.

In the parcha tasdiq of 1891-1892 it was entered that the occupancy tenants, who were real brothers, had stated that they had occupied the land in 1869:

The enfranchisement of service inam lands in the name of the office holder does not per se debar a divided member of the family of the office holder from claiming a share in the enfranchised lands.

Where a divided member sues for a share in the lands enfranchised, the onus lies on him to prove that he is a member of the original service holder's family and that at any partition which has taken place among the members of the family the inam lands were kept out of partition as undivided property in which all the members retained joint rights.

The sale-deed in favour of B contained the following clause: "whatever rights I had in the shamilat in respect of the above-mentioned land all those rights now belong to the purchaser" K. subsequently obtained a declaration that no share in the shamilat had passed either to M. or to B. The latter then brought a suit against M. claiming to be compensated out of M's khewat land for the loss of shamilat consequent on K's act:

Held, that M. did not purport to sell any shamilat to B and the latter's suit must, therefore, fail. L MALIK KHAN v. BHOLA RAM 459

—Attachment of property—Sale by judgment-debtor to pay off decree, validity of—Suit by purchaser against judgment-debtor, maintainability of.

The intention of rule 36 of the Sonthal Parganas Civil Rules is specifically and solely to protect the decree-holder; so that where there has been a bona fide sale by a judgment-debtor of property under attachment for the purpose of paying off the decree-holder, the judgment-debtor cannot question the validity of that sale as between himself and the purchaser, and a suit for possession of the property by the purchaser against the judgment-debtor is not barred by the rule. PAT BABU LAL SHAHA v. ## Transfer of Property Act—contd.

The substance of the provisions embodied in section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act is that, though an assignment is of a defective title, yet when the assignor afterwards acquires a good title, the Court will make that good title available to make the assignment effectual, or, in other words, the interest when it accrues feeds the estoppel.

The special provision relating to exchange contained in section 119 of the Transfer of Property Act does not exclude the operation of section 43 of the Act. For the purposes of section 43, an exchange stands on the same footing as a sale. C BHAIKAB CHANDRA MONDAL V. JIBAN KRISHNA MONDAL, 33 O. L. J. 184 819

—s. 53—Fraudulent transfer—Decree against Lambardar for share of profits—Subsequent alienations by Lambardar—Suit to declare alienations invalid—Proof requisite.

Certain decrees were obtained from the Revenue Court for a share of the profits against a Lambardar. The Lambardar thereafter alienated some of his property in favour of his son and grandson, and the present suit was brought to declare the alienations invalid, on the ground that they were made with the object of defrauding the decrees of the Revenue Court. It was not alleged, nor was evidence led to show, that after the alienations the Lambardar had no other property left to satisfy the decrees:

Held, that the suit must fail, as there was no allegation or proof that the alienations had the effect of depriving the plaintiff of the amount of the Revenue Court's decrees. A JWALA SINGH V. FATTA, 19 A. L. J. 87 825

—s. 53—Hindu Law—Joint family—Transfer of family property by one member to another—Decree against transferor—Property transferred, whether liable to attachment and sale—Execution of decree—Attachment of property—Claim based on transfer deed, failure of—Declaration, suit for—Decree-holder, whether can plead that transfer fraudulent—Transfer, whether can be questioned by subsequent creditor.

Inasmuch as a transfer by one member of a joint undivided Hindu family of a portion of the joint family property to another member of the family is illegal, a suit by the transferee against the holder of a decree against the transferor for a declaration that the property so transferred is not liable to attachment and sale in execution of that decree, is not maintainable.

Per Stuart, J.—When a decree-holder attaches property which he states to be the property of the judgment-debtor, and a third party objects that the property is not the property of the judgment-debtor, because it has been transferred by a good and valid deed, and is met with the reply that the deed is a fraudulent deed, and the Court in execution decides that the deed is a fraudulent deed and upholds the attachment, it is open to the decree-holder to plead, in a subsequent suit brought against him by that third party for a declaration that the deed is a valid deed, that the deed is fraudulent. It is not necessary, in such a case, for the decree-holder to bring a suit to declare the fraudulent nature of the transfer.

Where a man makes a fraudulent transfer in order to evade his existing obligations, that transfer can be impeached by creditors whose obligations are of a later date. A RAM CHAND V. MATHURA CHAND, 19 A. L. J. 299

ss. 53, 118—Transfer, mutual, of immoveable property, nature of—Exchange—Transfer to defeat anticipated attachment in execution, nature of.

A mutual transfer of immoveable property between two persons amounts to an exchange within the meaning of section 118 of the Transfer of Property Act, and each party acquires title in the property transferred to him on execution of the deed of transfer in his favour.

A transfer made merely with intent to defeat an anticipated execution is not a transfer of property made with intent to defraud, defeat or delay creditors within the meaning of section 18 of the Transfer of Property Act. O RIAZAT HUSAIN V. ALI BANDI, 7 O. L. J. 199

Subsequently, D. brought a suit for pre-emption and acquired the property from B., but neither he nor B. made any payment to C., who brought a suit to enforce his mortgage by sale of the property and obtained a decree. A., satisfied this decree and brought the present suit to recover the money paid by him by sale of the property:

Held, that B. and D. having acquired the property with notice of the mortgage to C., the amount due on that mortgage formed a charge on the property under section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act, and as the amount due was paid by A., he was entitled to enforce his lien against the property in the hands of D. A RAMA NAND BHANU V. dispossession of—Damages, suit for—Limitation terminus a quo—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 97, 116.

The effect of a covenant for title implied by section 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act can only be got rid of by the vendor indicating by clear and unambiguous expressions that he does not mean to guarantee that he has good title to the property and is entitled to convey the same. Mere knowledge on the part of the vendee of a defect in the title of the vendor would not by itself defeat the vendee's right on the basis of such a covenant.

The recital in a deed of conveyance of previous transactions which form the links in the chain of the vendor's title, has not the effect in law of warning the vendee that the vendor has a title liable to be defeated because of some hidden defect, so as to exempt the vendor from all liability.

Where owing to a defect in the title of a vendor to convey, the vendee is dispossessed in execution of a decree obtained against him setting aside the conveyance, the starting point of limitation for a suit by the vendee for damages for breach of covenant is the date of the original decree in execution of which he is dispossessed. The fact that there is an appeal and second appeal in the suit would not postpone the terminus a quo to the date of the appellate decree, because an original decree is not suspended by the presentation of an appeal, nor is its operation interrupted where the decree on appeal is one of dismissal. M MAHAMED ALI SHERIFF V. Then some addition was made and a third sheet was added including other properties in the mortgage. The third sheet was signed by the mortgagor in the presence of the same witnesses who had signed the second sheet:

mortgage-debt in the month of Jeth in any year. The mortgagors deposited the amount due in Court on the 22nd June 1910, the last day of Jeth, but as notice could not be served on the mortgagee within the month of Jeth, the mortgagee did not appear and the proceedings fell through, but the money deposited remained in Court. In 1916 the mortgagor brought the present suit for redemption and for damages for the last three years preceding the institution of the suit. The suit was dismissed on the ground that, as notice of the deposit could not be given to the mortgagee in the month of Jeth, the tender was not a valid tender. On second appeal:

Held, that the suit had been wrongly dismissed; that as the amount deposited was sufficient to discharge the mortgage, there should have been a decree for redemption from the last day of Jeth next succeeding the deposit, and that the mortgagors were entitled to a decree for possession and damages for three years preceding the suit. A AHMAD BEG V DHARMUN RAI, 19 A.
